CHAPTER I

OHIO STATE MEN IN THE TRAINING SCHOOLS AND CAMPS IN THE UNITED STATES

THE EARLIEST TRAINING CAMPS

The campaign for national preparedness had its small beginnings in the holding of two training camps for students at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, and the Presidio of Monterey, California, the total attendance being 222. The establishment of these experimental camps was proposed by Major General Leonard Wood (then Chief of Staff), by direction of the Secretary of War. In 1914 the number of such camps was doubled, and the attendance rose to three times that of the two earlier camps. With the war in progress in 1915, Plattsburg Barracks, New York, was utilized for several encampments, one for students and the others for business and professional men, while camps were also conducted at other places, including one for both students and business men at Fort Sheridan, Illinois. The year 1916 witnessed a further increase of encampments and a combined enrollment of more than 16,000.

Meantime, the students of the first camps and the men of the early encampments at Plattsburg and Fort Sheridan saw the need of promoting the movement and formed the Military Training Camps Association, whose officers, with the support of the War Department, secured the enactment of Section 54 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, which authorizes the Secretary of War to hold training camps under such regulations as he might prescribe and to furnish at Government expense uniforms, subsistence, transportation, etc., to those attending. Up to 1916 the men in training had paid their own expenses of travel, uniforms, and subsistence. Now, however, Congress appropriated $2,000,000 for these and other purposes involved in maintaining the camps; and in May, 1917, it voted a much larger sum. But the need of an immense number of officers for the huge army to be raised when the United States entered the war caused the immediate substitution of Reserve Officers' Training Camps for the civilian camps hitherto held.

OHIO STATE MEN IN THE RESERVE OFFICERS' TRAINING CAMPS

Already in the summer of 1916 Professor Edward Orton, Jr., attended an encampment at Plattsburg Barracks, and in the following summer a few of the younger University men, including Lorin B. Thompson, son of President Thompson, took training at the same place. In the middle of May, 1917, sixteen training camps for reserve officers were opened, the first of a series of four, at several of which numbers of Ohio State boys received their commissions in various branches of the service, especially at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, and in lesser numbers at Fort Sheridan, Illinois; Fort Leavenworth, Kansas; Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia; and at other places named in the following pages. In response to a letter sent out by Major George L. Converse early in April, 1917, many former cadet officers promptly joined the Reserve Officers' Training Corps and passed their tests for admission to the training camps.

Hundreds of our boys enrolled in the first Officers' Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison and received their commissions in the middle of August, 1917. J. Ruskind Dyer and Robert Nevin were Y. M. C. A. secretaries at this encampment, as they were also class-day orator and poet, respectively, of the graduating class at the University. Both were therefore released from the camp long enough to attend the exercises on the campus on June 4. Among the 260 Ohio State boys who signed the college register in the Y. tent were Virgil Z. Dorfmeier, '13, and Eckley G. Gossett, '13, two former cadet colonels. On their marches in the morning, and even at their lectures in the evening, the members of the University contingent sang their favorite college songs. The second Sunday in camp was recognized as "Ohio State Day," and the address in the Y. tent was given by President Thompson. An interesting photograph taken on this occasion shows 145 of the boys in their uniforms arranged in three long rows, with the President standing in the center of the group, and tents and a leafy grove in the background. In August the Lantern printed the names of 45 of those who had just received their commissions. Three of this list had been made captains; seven, first lieutenants; and the rest, second lieutenants. Most of the 445 commissions were in the Infantry, but 7 or 8 were in the Field Artillery; 2, in the Cavalry; and 2, in the Quartermasters' Corps. Professor E. S. Manson of the Department of Astronomy was appointed first lieutenant in the Statistical Section at this time.

One of the boys attending the second Officers' Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison wrote that of Ohio's quota of a thousand men several hundred were from Ohio State, and that they were able to appreciate the excellent military training they had received while in college. On their marches they made the Indiana hills "send back the cry" of the campus football paeon "Across the Field" and other favorite songs. Ninety-six members of the clan were able to assemble between the halves of the Indiana game and have their pictures taken in company with President Thompson, who was again visiting the camp.

This second encampment at Fort Benjamin Harrison, like those of the same series held elsewhere, prepared the men to obtain commissions in one or another of the various branches of the service—Infantry, Cavalry, Engineer, Ordnance, Quartermaster, Signal, and Statistical. Thereafter separate specialized schools were conducted by various staff corps and departments—Statistical, Signal, etc.,—for training their own officers. These schools belonged to the third and fourth series of Reserve Officers' Training Camps and were held at a score or more of National Army and National Guard training fields. After the opening of the fourth series, the staff schools were separated from their divisions, and the candidates needed for overseas duty at an early date were transferred to five Central Officers' Training Schools at permanent replacement camps. These new arrangements scattered student groups widely among the camps and schools, as will appear later. Some of the graduate officers of the first encampment at Fort Benjamin Harrison were assigned to the 83rd Division, which was organized and trained at Camp Sherman, Ohio. The others were attached to other divisions at their several training grounds. The proportion of Ohio State candidates in the third and fourth encampments at Fort Benjamin Harrison was considerably smaller than in the earlier ones conducted there.

Small groups of the University's sons attended the successive Officers' Training Camps at Fort Sheridan, Illinois, which is an old Army post near Lake Michigan. During June, 1918, an encampment was conducted here for the instruction of men of draft age who had some previous military training, but were not seeking officers' commissions. Major Converse of the University, who had originated a method of keeping and computing student records that was highly commended by the Inspector General from Washington, D. C., was present and taught his system of record-keeping to the camp officers concerned. Twenty-seven of the Ohio State men who were at Fort Sheridan remained for the following encampment, which opened on July 18 for a 60-day session. Students were admitted on condition of staying during the entire encampment and of returning to their college work in the autumn. There were not less than 75 Ohio State boys enrolled in this camp.

Ohio State candidates in the Engineer Corps were trained at one or another of several Engineer Officers' Training Schools, namely, at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas; Leon Springs, Texas; Camp Humphreys, Virginia; and Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia. In August, 1917, a party of men from the campus finished their course in Railway Engineering at Camp Forrest, Fort Oglethorpe, and went to France together. This group, comprising more than a dozen members, was one of the first to be sent overseas. Among the personal items printed in the Lantern and the Monthly during the war some give the names of former students and graduates of the College of Engineering who attended these schools and were then sent to join their Engineer regiments at various stations, including the Engineer depots. Of the class graduated November 14, 1917, at Leavenworth six men who had been in the University together constituted what one of them described as "the real gang out here."

The University had many men in the Signal Corps, some of whom had obtained part of their training as members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps on the campus. Others who had been partly trained at various camps and cantonments took courses in the special schools established by the Signal Corps for the instruction of its personnel at Camp Alfred Vail, New Jersey, and Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, and in a training unit for officer candidates at Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut. The Signal Corps had a school of Meteorology at College Station, Texas, in which the chief instructor was Oliver L. Fassig, '82, meteorologist of the Maryland Weather Service.

Scores of Ohio State boys entered the Air Service, a few of them going to Toronto, Canada, for their training before schools and flying fields were ready for them in the United States. More of them took their "ground" work in the School of Military Aeronautics on the campus than in any similar school at any of the other seven universities where ground schools were maintained. Singly or in small numbers they were to be found in the other schools, as, for example, at Princeton University in New Jersey, the University of Texas at Austin, and the Air Service Radio School, Columbia University, New York City. One group of ten of our men is known to have attended the School of Aeronautics at the University of Texas.

There was probably not an aviation field from coast to coast where representatives of the "Scarlet and Gray" did not make their practice flights as pilots. The drone of their motors might have been heard high above Wilbur Wright and McCook fields at Dayton, Ohio; Post Field at Fort Sill, Oklahoma; Chanute Field at Rantoul and Scott Field at Belleville, Illinois; Payne Field at West Point, Mississippi; Taliaferro, Kelly, and Love fields in Texas; and the aviation grounds of Hempstead on Long Island, Omaha, Los Angeles, Vancouver, and Pensacola. The names of other flying fields familiar to various Ohio State men might be added to this list.

Occasional candidates from the University took the six-weeks' course for armament officers in aviation and for men destined to care for machine guns and bombs that opened at Fairfield, Ohio, on April 2, 1918. A few also studied Aerial Photography at the manufactory of the Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, New York, and a few others, Map Compilation and Interpretation in the Officers' School at Cornell University, Ithaca, New York. Similar courses were also taught at the various aviation fields.

Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, as noted on a previous page, was the training ground of some of our University men who attended the Engineer Officers' School there. Not a few of their fellows seeking commissions in other branches of the service were also sent to Oglethorpe. They came in especially from Camp Sheridan, near Montgomery, Alabama, as "selects" from among the enlisted men and as graduates of a college with an approved military course from the 37th, or "Buckeye," Division, in time to attend the third Officers' Training Camp. Others were amongs the group of 350 sent from Camp Sheridan to a similar encampment at Leon Springs, Texas. Many of our officers in the Medical, Dental, and Veterinary services were trained in the series of special schools at Camp Greenleaf, Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia. However, the first of the schools at Greenleaf for the military and professional instruction of dental officers and their authorized assistants was not established until the middle of March, 1918. The course lasted two months and was repeated at regular intervals. The Veterinary section school at Camp Greenleaf first opened in February, 1918. Some Ohio State veterinarians who had graduated prior to that time were sent there for a short training before taking the examination for their commissions. Those who had been permitted to complete their University course in June, 1918, as members of the Medical Enlisted Reserve Corps, were assigned to Greenleaf for two months' instruction before being appointed second lieutenants. By June 20th, 2 classes of Veterinary officers had graduated, and thereafter a class graduated each month after completing 60 days' training.

The schools for medical officers and enlisted men were in operation at Camp Greenleaf as early as June, 1917, and were attended by some Ohio State members of the Ohio National Guard, while others attended similar schools at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, and Fort Riley, Kansas. A knowledge of the equipment and work of these schools may be gained from those at the Georgian camp, which had their field hospitals, both horse and motor-driven, pack mules, ambulances, and all the appliances required by the Medical Corps. Here were formed sanitary companies, field and evacuation hospitals, and other medical units for carrying on the work of the Army surgeon. Towards the end of August, 1917, the men who had finished their course at these medical training camps were distributed to a number of other camps to attend to sanitary matters and get ready to handle the thousands of recruits soon to arrive. Other Ohio State physicians, who had entered the Army from civil life and gone directly into service at posts and camps, were required, like their colleagues similarly situated, to undergo garrison training, including a prescribed course of reading. Among the State University's men in the Medical Officers' School at Camp Greenleaf in the spring of 1918 were Dr. John H. Nichols of the Department of Physical Education and Dr. Gilbert W. Brehm, '14, the latter being an instructor, as well as commander, of the 5th Battalion of medical officers, with the rank of major.

The schools for dental officers and privates, which were conducted at Camp Greenleaf, were attended by a number of men from our College of Dentistry. Lieutenant Colonel John Howard Snapp, '11, was commandant of the officers' section and Major George Ray Tressel, '15, of the enlisted men's section, which contained at one time a score or more of representatives of our dental department. Many of their University brethren from the practice were in service in numerous base and post hospitals in the United States, in the Philippine and Hawaiian Islands, and in the Canal Zone, not to mention those who were with various hospital units overseas.

About 30 dental students who had not completed their professional studies at the University were enabled to do so by entering the Medical Enlisted Reserve Corps, from which most of them were transferred to the dental section of the Students' Army Training Corps early in October, 1918. The same methods were applied in the case of the undergraduates of the University's medical colleges, its veterinary college, and certain other departments that educated specialists needed by the Government in time of war. Hundreds of new students just entering Ohio State in the fall of 1918 joined the Students' Army Training Corps, with a view to preparing themselves in one or another of the professional, technical, or military branches of the service.

Without attempting to enumerate all of the Officers' Training Camps in which former students of the University secured their commissions, we must content ourselves with adding that Ohio State had its representatives in the Infantry Officers' Schools at Camp Custer, Michigan; Camp Dodge, Iowa; Camp Sheridan, Alabama; and Camp McArthur, Texas; in the School of Fire at Fort Sill, Oklahoma; in the Coast Artillery Officers' School at Fort Monroe, Virginia; in the School for Line and Staff Corps at Fort Sam Houston, Texas; and in the Machine-Gun School at Camp Hancock, Georgia. During the summer and autumn of 1918 the University had an exceptional number of men in the Field Artillery Central Officers' School at Camp Zachary Taylor, Kentucky, and in the Field Artillery Replacement Depot at Camp Jackson, South Carolina.

OHIO STATE MEN IN THE CAMPS AND CANTONMENTS

The National Guard units, which were filled and organized for service during the summer of 1917, were placed under tents in 16 camps located in the Southern States. The National Army divisions, however, being kept for the most part in the Northern States, were housed in wooden buildings in 16 cantonments. The Regular Army divisions were trained in part at one or another of these 32 stations, and in part as separate units at various Army posts.

The wide distribution of the sons of the University insured that few, if any, of these training stations should be without a larger or smaller number of them within their boundaries. Nevertheless, many more of our men were to be found in Camp Mills, New York; Camp Sheridan, near Montgomery, Alabama; and Camp Sherman, near Chillicothe, Ohio, than in any of the other training fields. At Camp Mills the 42nd or "Rainbow" Division, containing a considerable fraction of Ohio National guardsmen, was assembled for early transportation to France, without first spending a season at some other training ground. With the exception of the Ohio State men in the 146th Infantry and a few of their fellows in the 167th Infantry, the representation of the University in the Rainbow Division was chiefly confined to the 166th Infantry. The commanding officer of the last-named regiment was Colonel Benson W. Hough, '09, of Columbus, and the next in command was Lieutenant Colonel George Florence, '93, of Circleville, while no less than nine companies were in charge of Ohio State captains and first lieutenants. There were also a few second lieutenants and a number of non-commissioned officers and privates from the University in this regiment. At Camp Sheridan the 37th or "Buckeye" Division, consisting almost wholly of seasoned Ohio National Guard troops, was organized and trained for foreign service. At this camp Paul E. Nolan, Agr. '14, of Springfield, O., was a Y. M. C. A. secretary. And, finally, at Camp Sherman, the 83rd Division, which was a National Army unit drawn for the most part from Ohio, was formed. It is needless to say that these three divisions contained hundreds of former Ohio State students among their officers and men.

THE 83RD DIVISION AT CAMP SHERMAN, OHIO

The 83rd Division would have been an all-Ohio unit except for the fact that a small proportion of its men was taken from a few counties of western Pennsylvania. It was organized at Camp Sherman under Major General Edwin F. Glenn, who had previously been in command of Fort Benjamin Harrison where the reserve officers from Ohio assigned to the 83rd had been trained. This combination of circumstances brought together several hundred Ohio State men in the cantonment. The graduate officers arrived late in August, 1917. Some days later lines of Army trucks rumbled up the long rough road of the camp filled with the drafted men, most of whom were in their civilian clothes. As the warehouses were still unprovided with anything but regulation hats, shoes, and a few other articles, the "rookies" began their preliminary drills in mixed apparel like newly formed Freshman squads on the University campus.

Of 210 Ohio State men whose service records show unmistakably that they belonged to the 83rd Division, 76 were commissioned officers, and many more were sergeants and corporals. The organizations among which these officers and their fellow-collegians were distributed in larger or smaller groups were as follows: the 28th, 30th, 127th, 324th, 326th, 329th, 330th, 331st, and 332nd Regiments of Infantry; the 322nd, 323rd, 324th, and 332nd Machine Gun Battalions; the 322nd, 323rd, and 324th Field Artillery Regiments; the 127th and 308th Battalions of Military Police; the 308th and 331st Ammunition Trains; the 112th and 308th Supply Trains; the 308th Engineers; the 308th Field Signal Battalion; and the 308th Sanitary Train. Of the Ohio State men who served as officers of these various organizations, 14 became captains; 3, majors; and 2, lieutenant colonels. Frank A. Hunter, '11, held the last named rank in the 330th Infantry, and James C. McDermott, '10, in the 329th Infantry. Charles J. Foster, '13, Ormsby Keselring, '14, and Charles W. Montgomery, '04, were the men who attained majorities.

Schools were soon established for giving instruction in the use of the rifle and hand-grenades, in bayonet fighting, signaling, machine gunnery, and other branches. British and French instructors taught the latest methods of European warfare. The winter and spring were spent in practice on the three rifle ranges, with targets from 100 to 1,000 yards distant, and in the system of trenches laid out near the camp. The firing on the machine-gun range northeast of the training field was made more realistic by the use of painted scenes from the war zones.

By Thanksgiving an immense cruciform Community House, erected by the Red Cross and other organizations and containing a great assembly room, dining-room, lounge, auditorium, dancing floor, etc., was ready for the use of visitors who came to see their relatives and friends among the soldiers. Many of the young people indulged in dancing in the evenings, except on Sunday.

"Huts" for the Y. M. C. A., the Knights of Columbus, the Salvation Army, and other associations were built in various parts of the cantonment. Until April, 1918 Dwight W. Weist, '05, was general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in the camp and manager of all its activities. He gathered a large staff of workers whom he placed in charge of the various Y. huts, besides teachers, directors, and others. Among these were Professor Charles A. Bruce, '95, as an instructor in French; Luke Cooperrider, '17, as assistant educational director; and John W. Bricker, B.A. '16, LL.B. '20, Roy Brenholts, '07, Harvey Evan Conrad, M.A., Dallas D. Dupre, '16, Oren Weston Hawkins, Grad. '17, the Rev. Ira G. McCormack, a University pastor, and Clyde Ray Terry, Arts '13, as secretaries at several of the huts. There was also a Y. M. C. A. Hostess House to extend hospitality to, and attend to the wants of, the women relatives and friends of the men in camp. In the spring of 1918 Dr. R. D. McKenzie, instructor in Sociology at the University, was associate field director of the Red Cross in charge of home service work for the soldiers.

In the previous December the Liberty Theater was erected in the center of the cantonment, with a seating capacity of 1,300 and a stage large enough for any road production. Built by the Commission on Training Camp Activities, it was operated by a civilian manager supplied by the Government. The prices of admission to the plays, musical comedies, vaudeville performances, and pictures given here were 25 and 50 cents. In the spring and summer of 1918 two exchange moving-picture theaters were opened by the camp exchange officer at the suggestion of General Glenn. The programs included the best photoplays then being produced. The admission charge to these shows was 10 cents. "Smileage" coupons were accepted at all the theaters.

The task of supplying books, magazines, and newspapers for the men in camp was undertaken by Mr. Burton E. Stevenson, custodian of the Chillicothe Public Library and first librarian at Camp Sherman. Early in July, 1917, he installed a collection of about 300 volumes of fiction and a supply of magazines in a Y. M. C. A. building. Soon thereafter a campaign for additional books and periodicals was conducted throughout Ohio by the War Council of the American Library Association, the State Library Commission, and various libraries of Ohio. The University Library, with the co-operation of the Faculty and students, was able to contribute many volumes and magazines to the Camp Library; numerous other libraries made loans of material from their shelves, and at the end of December, 1917, a library building, erected by the American Library Association, was opened with more than 15,000 volumes of the best fiction and technical books in its keeping. Twenty-two branch libraries were operated in various parts of the camp, trained attendants being supplied by the public libraries of Ohio. Mr. C. Wells Reeder of the University Library was in charge of the central library during January, 1918. By the end of that year the camp's collection of books numbered some 40,000 volumes. In October, 1917, The Scioto Gazette of Chillicothe, Ohio, issued a Camp Sherman edition of 20,000 copies, on the front page of which was a picture of Major General Glenn, the Commandant of the Camp. The paper also contained pictures of military activities at Chillicothe at the time of the Civil War.

For the purpose of allaying homesickness among the men, the Y. M. C. A. offered to act as a central agency in distributing newspapers from their communities to convenient points in the camp. Through the efforts of Mr. Stevenson some 500 dailies and as many more weeklies were regularly received at the Y. headquarters. They were thence distributed to those welfare buildings nearest the barracks of the men from each locality.

Major General Glenn early suggested that the camp should have its own newspaper, and this was made possible by the financial and journalistic support of the enterprise by Mr. Robert F. Wolfe, proprietor of The Columbus Evening Dispatch and The Ohio State Journal, whose presses printed the paper for the cantonment. The first number of The Eighty-Third Division News appeared on November 7, 1917. The new journal was a four-column, eight-page weekly and ranged from 5,000 to 20,000 copies per issue. On April 10, 1918, it was enlarged to standard size, with double the number of columns of the earlier issues. Five weeks later, in anticipation of the departure of the 83rd Division for the Atlantic coast on its way to France, the name of the paper was changed to The Camp Sherman News.

It contained numerous articles regarding the various units of the 83rd Division, interspersed with many personal items and with reports of football, basketball, and baseball games in which the camp teams figured. It chronicled, with unmistakable zest, the series of victories won by the Division eleven during the autumn of 1917, and, with the approach of Thanksgiving Day, printed a cartoon by Dudley T. Fisher, Jr., '14, entitled "Over the Top," showing a tank in the form of a football manned by the camp players passing through barbed-wire entanglements and ready to surmount an embankment labeled "Ohio State." This pictorial prophecy was not realized, however, for the Division team was defeated 27 to 0 on Thanksgiving Day by the University players, who were then the Western Conference champions. It was not until after the cessation of the influenza epidemic, in the fall of 1918, that Ohio State was represented on the Camp Sherman eleven, when Louis E. Pickerel, '16, played quarterback on the 95th Division team.

On the evening after Thanksgiving Day, 1917, the University clan in camp, numbering several hundred men, celebrated Ohio State Day with a banquet at the Post Exchange, and immediately afterward with a dance in the Community House. Members of the Ross County Alumni Association promoted the celebration, and the Rev. Ira G. McCormack served on the committee of arrangements.

Together with nearly 20,000 of their comrades, the Ohio State boys enjoyed the combined spectacle and concert given in the space before the Community House on Christmas Eve by 1500 singers from Chillicothe, Columbus, and other Ohio towns. It was a splendid festival of "Song and Light," the successive features of which illustrated in harmonies of tone and color the story of "Merry Christmas." In the Y. huts there were Christmas trees sparkling with multicolored electric lights and laden with gifts for all the men.

Before the end of December Colonel Theodore Roosevelt visited Camp Sherman and made an address in which he complimented the officers and enlisted men on the progress they had made in military attainments and commended all the camps as "the greatest existing universities for the training of American citizenship."

In January, 1918, the War Records Committee of the University sent Professors George W. Rightmire, Wilbur H. Siebert, Joseph R. Taylor, and Joseph S. Myers to get as complete a list as possible of the names and addresses of Ohio State men in the cantonment. The visiting delegation collected the desired data relating to several scores of members of the 83rd Division and arranged with the secretaries in the Y. M. C. A. huts to obtain and send to the University the names, military organizations, etc., of as many more as might be secured. Hundreds of preliminary service records were thus obtained.

Former President William H. Taft spent two or three days in the cantonment in the latter part of February and spoke on two successive evenings before capacity audiences in the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium on the diplomatic causes of the war. Three months later Major General James D. McLaughlin, military attaché of the British Embassy at Washington, and Brigadier General G. A. Trotter, head of the British Military Mission to the camps of the United States, paid a visit to Camp Sherman.

Selected University and other candidates of the rank and file were trained for commissions in the third Officers' Training Camp, which opened at Camp Sherman early in January, 1918, seven British and French officers giving the instruction in the latest developments of European warfare. The course lasted 15 weeks, and commissions were issued only as second lieutenants were needed.

With the coming of spring after the very severe winter of 1917, the score of units of the 83rd Division were filled by the numbers of new men then arriving at the cantonment, and late in May the Division moved to the seaboard to embark for Europe. Thus the hundreds of Ohio State boys from Camp Sherman became a part of the 300,000 fresh American troops who were transported to France during the summer months of 1918, and who participated in Marshal Foch's great movement of September and the following months which was "to force the Teutons to evacuate the line which they had spent years in intrenching and fortifying" from Dixmude to the Meuse.

About a fortnight after the departure of the 83rd Division from Camp Sherman, the 84th, which contained comparatively few of our men, came in from Camp Taylor, at Louisville, Kentucky, and, after remaining until late in August, also left for Europe. It may be noted in passing that the supervising architect in the construction of Camp Taylor was Lewis H. Sturm, C.E. '06, who was second in authority only to the constructing quartermaster in charge, Major Lampere. The magnitude of such an undertaking reveals itself in the large sum of money expended, the number of structures erected, and so on. Major Lampere and his colleague expended between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000, erected more than 1400 buildings, laid 35 miles of water mains and laterals and 30 miles of sewer, and constructed 10 miles of asphalt and macadam roads, besides heating stations, electric-light lines, etc. While engaged in all this work, Mr. Sturm had the pleasure of meeting an old college mate, Captain John R. Tanner, '08, who was in command of the 109th Engineers at Camp Taylor.

While the 84th Division was in training at Camp Sherman, a fourth Officers' Training Camp was held there for selected men. The number of Ohio State boys in the 84th was comparatively small, and those who became candidates for commissions in part remained at Sherman and in part were sent to staff schools elsewhere, where they found themselves in company with some of their college mates who had come from other camps.

In September, 1918, some 600 men arrived at Camp Sherman from Camp Lee, Virginia, and Camp Pike, Arkansas, to serve as non-commissioned officers in organizing the 95th Division. They were supplemented by 50 officers and 75 enlisted men from overseas as instructors in European methods of combat to the various corps being formed by the transfer of groups of soldiers from other training grounds, East and West. In October the influenza epidemic swept through the cantonment and suspended the further organization of the new Division, besides rendering it necessary to put the place under quarantine for three weeks. Of the thousands of men on the sick list 1100 died. Scarcely had the dread contagion been subdued when the signing of the Armistice caused general rejoicing among the occupants of the camp, and the announcement that discharges would begin on December 10. By the end of another week all the members of the 95th Division had been dismissed from the service.

THE 37TH ("BUCKEYE") DIVISION AT CAMP SHERIDAN, ALABAMA

Numbers of Ohio State men belonged to the regiments of the Ohio National Guard, which mobilized under the call of President Wilson in July, 1917, and were drafted into Government service in the following month. These regiments began their Southward movement at once, but not all of the constituent units of the 37th Division arrived at Camp Sheridan, near Montgomery, Alabama, until in October, 1917. Eight Infantry regiments, not including the 146th (the old Fourth Ohio), which became a part of the 42nd or "Rainbow" Division, three regiments of Artillery, one regiment of Engineers with an Engineer train, one Field Signal Battalion, an ammunition and supply train, four field hospitals, three ambulance companies, two companies of military police, and a headquarters troop, constituted the "Buckeye" Division at Fort Sheridan. Late in May, 1918, about 8,400 drafted men, principally from the Southern States, were received at the camp to fill vacancies in the different organizations.

Already in the early part of October, 1917, Camp Sheridan had reached its maximum strength of 24,000 men. There was not an organization in the 37th Division in which the University was not represented by a smaller or larger group of officers and private soldiers. The larger groups were to be found in the 134th, 135th, and 136th Field Artillery regiments; in the 145th, 146th, and 147th regiments of Infantry, and especially in the 112th Sanitary Train. Colonel Charles C. Weybrecht, '90, was in charge of the 146th Infantry; Major Russell L. Mundhenk, '16, a former major of cadets and later an instructor in the University, was commander of the 112th Field Signal Battalion; Harry H. Snively, '95, was lieutenant colonel of the 112th Sanitary Train and director of field hospitals; Simeon Nash, '04, was lieutenant and colonel of the 136th Field Artillery; Russell G. Barkalow, '18, Harry W. Brown, '02, Dora V. Burkett, '97, Charles H. Hustor, '97, Charles E. McClelland, '02, and Edward E. Smith, '10, were majors in various units; more than a score of their college mates were captains, while over 40 others were first and second lieutenants. George M. Trautman, '14, an instructor of Physical Education, was athletic director for the 37th Division. Frank L. Westerman, '18, and Paul F. Hauptert, '14, both Columbus newspaper men, were members of the editorial staff of five that published The Sheridan Reveille, the only daily journal issued at any of the camps and cantonments.

Among the Y. M. C. A. secretaries at Camp Sheridan were several University boys, including Howard R. Brentlinger, Luther D. Evans, and Herbert C. Kimmel. Writing from his hut in the fall of 1917, Kimmel stated that "over 50 of our boys have been in this building and signed their names to our register for college men." He also spoke of having called upon Mr. Fred S. Ball, '88, an attorney of Montgomery, Alabama, who was much interested in the Ohio State contingent in the camp.

The Sheridan Reveille made its first appearance on December 5, 1917, as a standard-size, four-page newspaper, which was issued on Sundays as well as week days. It gave considerable space to general war news, without neglecting local personages and events. It marked the advent of May, 1918, with a souvenir edition of 24 pages, containing a large front-page portrait of the organizer of the "Buckeye" Division, Major General Charles G. Treat, and smaller halftones in the later pages of some of his subordinate officers, including Weybrecht, Mundhenk, and Trautman.

With the approach of Christmas Day, plans were formed by Trautman, in cooperation with the physical directors of the Y. M. C. A., for a holiday program of athletics, while the welcome announcement appeared in the Reveille that Governor James M. Cox and a large party of Ohioans were arranging to spend Christmas with the boys in their camp. The regimental post offices were hard pushed to handle the heavy holiday mails, which brought quantities of gifts from the families and friends at home. On Sunday afternoon, December 23, the Governor's train arrived at Montgomery in two sections, the first bearing Mr. Cox and 250 of his fellow-citizens, and the second consisting of 11 baggage cars filled to the roof with boxes and packages containing more gifts for the members of the "Buckeye" Division. On Christmas evening Governor Cox addressed the men assembled in the Buckeye Coliseum on "Ohio's Christmas Message," the occasion being the climax of a memorable celebration in fulfilment of the Governor's promise made to the boys the previous summer, when they were leaving for Alabama, that he would be with them on Christmas Day.

Former President William Howard Taft spent Sunday, February 3, at Camp Sheridan and spoke in the coliseum on the evening of that day. About three weeks later Secretary of War Newton D. Baker and Major General Treat held a review of the men in camp.

At the end of February Professor George W. Rightmire, a member of the University War Records Committee, spent several days at Fort Sheridan in gathering the addresses of nearly 200 men for Ohio State's service roll. When he left the camp on March 2 he had not secured all of the names, but through the cooperation of the Y. secretaries many others were added.

By the middle of December, 1917, Divisional Schools were opened for the Infantry company officers, the Machine-Gun battalion officers, the Supply battalion officers, the Staff, and those in the other organizations, both officers and enlisted men. Ohio State's former students were to be found in a number of these schools, among whose instructors were several French and British officers. Some of the University's sons were included in the hundreds of candidates selected from among the enlisted men and the graduates of colleges with approved military courses and sent in January to the third Officers' Training Camp at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, and at Leon Springs, Texas.

Opportunities for reading and study were supplied by the camp's free library, which was stocked with thousands of books and magazines. In March, 1918, the custodian of the Montgomery Public Library conducted a campaign for the purpose of adding 3,000 volumes to the collection.

From time to time the arduous process of military training was relieved by minstrel shows, amateur performances, and other entertainments which were held in the Buckeye Coliseum; by athletic events, including boxing and wrestling, in Y. building No. 57; by games of pushball which were greatly enjoyed by the Infantry regiments, and by baseball matches between the Division team and the Cincinnati Reds, the latter club being in training on Soldiers' Field during the latter part of March.

Besides the Ohio State contingent in the 37th Division, there were a few of their college mates in the 9th Division (one of the Regular Army units), which was also at Camp Sheridan before going overseas. Among the latter were two captains and a first lieutenant of the 45th Infantry, a captain of the 67th Infantry, and several other first and second lieutenants of other companies.

The 37th Division sailed from France about the middle of February, 1919, and was demobilized at Camp Sherman, Ohio, in March.

OHIO STATE MEN IN THE OTHER CAMPS AND CANTONMENTS

The University had various numbers of its sons in all the camps and cantonments and in all the divisions, with the possible exception of two—the 93rd and 94th. It contributed small groups of both officers and men to nearly all of the Regular Army divisions, which were numbered from 1 to 20, inclusive, although in the case of four of these it was represented by only a few officers and, so far as our records show, hardly any men. With the exception of the 37th or "Buckeye"

Division and the 42nd or "Rainbow" Division, the same statement applies to the National Guard divisions (Nos. 26 to 42, inclusive), as it does also to the National Army divisions (Nos. 76 to 95, inclusive), with the single exception of the 83rd.

Captains Alva K. Overturf, '04, Averill B. Pfeiffer, '17, and Robert L. Tavenner, '08, were among our officers in the 1st Division; and we had several lieutenants in the 17th Field Artillery, besides other officers in various units of the 2nd Division. It is worthy of mention also that a few of our men served in the 5th and 6th Marines of this division. Both of these divisions were sent overseas without being kept in training camps. Camp Greene, North Carolina, was the training ground for both the 3rd and 4th Divisions, to which the University supplied jointly not less than 25 officers and probably a lesser number of enlisted men. Major Edwin C. Kelton, '13, of the 6th Engineers, and Major Charles G. Souder, '03, of the 76th Field Artillery, were the highest ranking officers in the University contingent at this camp. The combination of the 5th, 15th, and 33rd Divisions at Camp Logan, Texas, made this training field the temporary headquarters of a score or more of our men, most of whom held officers' commissions. Several Ohio State men served as Y. M. C. A. secretaries in camps where the University was scarcely represented otherwise, if at all. At Camp Buell, Kentucky, was Randolph Foster Sellers, M.A. '17; at Camp Grant, Illinois, was Cecil Melville Sims, B.A. '14; at Camp Meigs, Washington, D. C., Benjamin Harrison Darrow, Arts '14; at Fort Bliss, Texas, Walter D. Gray, Grad. '18; and at Fort Des Moines, Iowa, William Alfred Mason, Arts-Med. '05.

In all this list of camps and divisions which included Ohio State men among their members, none could compare in size of groups with Camp Mills and its "Rainbow" Division, Camp Sheridan and its "Buckeye" Division, and Camp Sherman and its 83rd Division. Neither the 32nd Division at Camp MacArthur, Texas, nor the 84th Division at Camp Zachary Taylor, Kentucky, could count half the number of our boys that belonged to either one of the three other divisions. Nevertheless, they outranked any of the other divisions in this respect. The 34th Division at Camp Cody, New Mexico, had as its organizer and commander Major General Augustus P. Blocksom, a former commandant of cadets at Ohio State.

Those of our men who entered the Motor Transport Corps received their training at one of three mechanical repair shops, namely, Normoyle (No. 304) at San Antonio, Texas; Holabird (No. 306) at Baltimore, Maryland, and Jessup (No. 305) at Atlanta, Georgia, but chiefly at the first two.

Four-fifths of all the troops were sent to Europe by way of New York. Hence two camps of embarkation were provided in its immediate neighborhood and were put in service in the fall of 1917. One was Camp Mills at Mineola, Long Island, and the other was Camp Merritt at Tenaflly, New Jersey, each having a capacity of 40,000 men. Later, space was provided for 20,000 more at Camp Upton on Long Island. It was through these three camps that most of the Ohio State men passed on their way to their overseas service.

OHIO STATE MEN IN THE NAVAL TRAINING STATIONS

Men enrolling in the Naval Reserve Force were assigned to Naval Training Stations, just as those entering the Army were sent, according to circumstances, to Reserve Officers' Training Camps or to the camps and cantonments for the divisions. At the opening of the war there were four regular stations upon which the Navy mainly depended for the training of seamen and firemen, and to some extent of petty officers and specialists. These permanent stations are located at Newport, Rhode Island; Great Lakes, Illinois; San Francisco, California; and the Naval Operating Base, Norfolk, Virginia.

Many additional training stations were established for the thousands of extra men needed in the Navy when the United States entered the war. These included Officer-material Schools and schools for naval specialists. A Reserve Officers' class at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, and Officer-material Schools in the various naval districts supplied most of the new deck and engineer officers for combatant vessels, while a similar school at Pelham Bay Park, New York City, and its adjuncts at Chicago, Cleveland, and Stevens Institute in Hoboken produced the deck and engineer officers for the merchant-type of ships. The curriculum of these schools included not less than two months' service aboard ocean or Great Lakes vessels "in an enlisted status but in a quasi-officer capacity." Harvard University at Cambridge, Massachusetts, conducted a large Naval Radio School and smaller ones for other naval specialties, and Massachusetts Institute of Technology, also in Cambridge, maintained one of the Navy Aeronautical Schools for prospective air pilots. There were also eight or nine Naval Air Stations where the candidates learned to operate seaplanes, the largest being at Pensacola, Florida. Early in October, 1918, units of the Students' Navy Training Corps were established in more than 90 colleges and universities, but these units were demobilized by the middle of the following December.

The Marine Corps had its separate school for fliers and mechanics at Massachusetts Institute, where they took a ten weeks' course of instruction, and its own flying field at Miami, Florida. It also had a school for mechanics, riggers, and armorers at the Naval Training Station, Great Lakes, Illinois, and a similar school at San Diego, California, the course covering eight weeks. Men enlisting in the Marine Corps were sent for their preliminary training to the Marine Recruiting Station on Paris Island, South Carolina.

Although the University had but few men in the Marine Corps, it had scores of them scattered among the training schools and stations of the Navy. First and last there must have been more than a hundred of them in the Naval Training Station at Great Lakes, which drew its constituency from the whole Middle West. Here they prepared themselves to become seamen, hospital apprentices, electricians, quartermasters, and ensigns. Here, as in the other the other naval and military training grounds, sports were encouraged by the officers in charge, and it is interesting to note that during the autumn of 1917 the University was represented on the Great Lakes football team by Frank R. Willaman, '21, and Harry W. Bliss, '21

The Naval Auxiliary Reserve School at Cleveland also had a considerable number of Ohio State boys, several of whom increased their athletic reputations by their brilliant playing on a team that went through the season of 1918 without defeat. Gailord R. ("Pete") Stinchcomb, '20, was hailed as a star for his generalship and open-field running. With him were associated Arthur S. Kiefer, '15, and Mark Fuller, '20, while Grant P. Ward, '15, helped to coach the team.

There were smaller numbers of the University boys at Newport, Rhode Island, including electricians, musicians, and seamen; in the aviation detachment at Massachusetts Institute; in the Radio School at Harvard; at the Submarine Base, New London; at the Auxiliary Reserve School, Chicago; at the Naval Academy; in the training stations at Hampton Roads, Pelham Bay Park, and Norfolk; at the flying fields at Pensacola and Miami, Florida, and so on. Practically all of these men continued their training aboard receiving ships at one or another of the various stations, and many of them got no farther than this towards active service. At Norfolk there was a Naval Hospital unit that was essentially an Ohio State organization. Dozens of boys enrolled early in October, 1918, in a Students' Navy Training unit on the campus and were demobilized in December after the signing of the Armistice.

Ohio State had the distinction of being represented on the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities in the person of Thomas J. Howells, Engr. '97, of Pittsburgh. This Commission comprised nine members in addition to its chairman, Raymond B. Fosdick, and was appointed by President Wilson in April, 1917. It coordinated the admirable efforts of the Y. M. C. A., the Knights of Columbus, the Jewish Welfare Board, the American Library Association, the Y. W. C. A., and the Salvation Army in providing recreational facilities, club life, libraries, and the other wholesome social opportunities of normal civilian life within the camps. It promoted athletics, established a circuit of theatrical and other entertainments, provided competent song leaders, and instituted a system of lectures on social hygiene for the benefit of the soldiers. Representatives of the commission cooperated with the War Camp Community Service and other organizations to prevent the sale of liquor to men in uniform and to suppress vice near the camps within the zones of protection established by the Government. To the end of maintaining the best conditions in the communities adjacent to the training fields, the Commission enlisted the services of the Playground and Recreational Association of America in organizing the social and recreational life of those communities so that the men on leave from camp would find themselves in an environment at once congenial and beneficial. To have served on a board that was instrumental in making camp life far superior to what it ever was before, and this for hundreds and hundreds of thousands of men, is something that Mr. Howells and his University may always be proud of. A similar commission performed a like service for the naval training stations and schools.

CHAPTER II

OHIO STATE MEN AT THE FRONT

By EDGAR HOLMES McNEAL

CHARACTER OF MODERN WARFARE

To follow the story and appreciate the experiences of Ohio State men in overseas forces, it will be necessary to recall the military situation and the character of fighting on the Western front. That line of battle, cutting across southern Belgium and northern and eastern France to the frontier of Switzerland, had remained almost unchanged from September 1914. There the major forces of both sides had been locked in a prolonged and desperate grapple that swayed back and forth, but never produced any material displacement of the line.

The conditions of fighting along this line were different from those of any previous war. The factor that revolutionized the methods of warfare was the immense number of troops available for active service. Universal military service produced armies numbering millions instead of hundreds of thousands, and made it possible to maintain in strength a battle-front hundreds of miles long. When the German armies of invasion failed to break through to Paris in 1914, they fell back on a line of natural and artificial defenses behind which they guarded the territorial advantages gained in the first rush; the French and British forces on their side "dug in" to hold the Germans in place and to prepare behind the line for attack on the German positions. The length of line which could be held in force prevented turning or flanking movements, for it rested on the sea at one end and on the Alps at the other.

The actual front consisted of parallel enemy trenches, each protected by barbed-wire entanglements, and separated from one another by a strip of land between, the familiar "No Man's Land." Behind the system of front-line trenches were second and third lines, the whole connected by communicating trenches. Front line service meant for the soldier so many days standing guard in the first line trenches, followed by so many days rest back of the line. While on active duty the troops were called on to repel enemy attacks, to take part in scouting expeditions in No Man's Land, or in raids on the enemy trenches for the purpose of sounding out his position and securing information as to his strength and intentions. Moreover, they were always being subjected to artillery bombardment. These were the every-day occurrences; at critical points the scene might be converted into raging battle in force by the concentration of troops for attempts at breaking through on either side.

During four years of this kind of warfare new instruments of offence and defence were developed and old ones revived. Hand grenades and trench helmets were antique forms brought into use again by the circumstances of trench warfare. The most disconcerting novelty was gas warfare, beginning with the sudden launching of waves of chlorine gas by the Germans against the British lines before Ypres in the spring of 1915. Terrible and inhuman as it was, the Allies were compelled to resort to it also, for no military command would be justified in allowing its troops to be subjected to attack by so powerful a weapon without providing them with means for fighting back. The primitive process of releasing gas waves to be borne by favoring winds to the enemy trenches was later replaced by the more precise method of gas shells, hollow projectiles filled with poisonous gas that could be dropped accurately on desired spots, there to explode and release their deadly fumes. As new forms of attack always produce new forms of defense, so gas attacks led to the development of gas masks, which became as constant a feature of the soldier's equipment as his helmet or his rifle.

Aeroplanes had not been tried out in war before 1914, although their possibilities had been foreseen and studied. They were destined to play a great part in this war. Their greatest value was for the observation of enemy positions and movements; aerial photography achieved a tremendous advance under the spur of military needs, while the new art of camouflage developed to meet the new means of observation. Combat planes were developed to protect the low-flying observation planes, and the immense advantage to the side that could win control of the air ("put out the eyes of the enemy"), by this means, produced an astonishing advance in fighting planes. Single combats and squadron combats were constantly going on overhead. As a weapon the aeroplane was used mainly for bombing military positions back of the line, although at the end of the war fighting planes sometimes participated in the offensive, flying low and pouring fire from machine guns into the trenches. All these types, observation planes, combat planes, and bombing planes, were constantly improving during the war and appearing in greater and greater numbers.

One of the latest weapons of attack was the tank, an armored caterpillar tractor that could advance over shell holes, barbed wire and even trenches, preceding or accompanying the waves of infantry.

THE MILITARY SITUATION IN 1917 AND EARLY 1918

Although the American forces were not available for action in any considerable numbers before 1918, there were Americans (and Ohio State men) in the fighting of 1917. The Allies faced that year with considerable optimism. The previous year had ended with the offensive in their hands, and decisive results were looked for in 1917. In April the British undertook a strong offensive in front of Arras, capturing the famous Vimy Ridge. In June they took Messines Ridge, and also advanced the line toward Lens. Later in the year they carried out a prolonged attack on the German lines in the region of Ypres, in which the important position of Passchendaele was taken in November. At the end of the year they made an attack on the German lines in front of Cambrai. The French were also active on their part of the line. In August an offensive at Verdun completed the recovery of ground earlier lost to the Germans in the great assault of 1916. In October they drove the Germans off the Chemin des Dames, the heights north of the Aisne River. These names—Vimy Ridge, Lens, Passchendaele, Cambrai, Chemin des Dames—come into our story, for there were Ohio State men in all of the actions.

Thus the Allies had maintained the offensive throughout 1917 on the Western front, but they had not been able anywhere to break through the German defense and their slightly improved position had been gained at tremendous cost. Moreover, the year ended with events that threatened to spell disaster for 1918; the withdrawal of Russia from the war, and the collapse of the Italian front after Caporetto.

The transfer of troops and material from the Russian front gave the Germans a decided preponderance over the French and British forces in France and Belgium, and Ludendorff prepared the tremendous offensives by which he hoped to win the war in 1918 on the Western front. These offensives were directed at the most important parts of the Allied line; in March, at the joint between the British and French armies at Amiens; in April at the Channel ports by way of the Lys River south of Ypres; in May at Paris by way of the Marne valley. It will be remembered how near they came to attaining these objectives.

EARLY INSTANCES OF OHIO STATE MEN AT THE FRONT

The story of Ohio State men in the war is a miniature of the story of the American Army in the war, for we had men in every branch of service and in every action.¹ Our story begins, however, before the arrival of American troops on the battle front. Especially interesting are the cases of men who enlisted in the service of the Allies, because of their sympathy for the cause, before the United States had abandoned its neutrality.

The earliest case on our records of an Ohio State man in action on the Western front is that of Herbert H. Beeson, Arts '15, who enlisted in the French Army in June 1916 and served until his discharge in December 1916. He was in the Ambulance Service attached to the 181st Infantry, Fifth French Army. He was in action on the Marne, and was awarded the French Croix de Guerre, two citations, and the Belgian Croix de Guerre. Returning to the United States, he enlisted in the American Army in July 1917 and was in France again with the 103d Sanitary Train, Twenty-Eighth Division.

Two other instances are those of Captain Frank H. Burr, Pharm. '98, and Major William E. Davis, B.A. '04, who enlisted in the Canadian Army in 1916. Captain Burr had been president and general manager of a real estate business in Alberta, Canada. After the outbreak of the war in 1914, he helped organize the "American Legion in Canada," composed of Americans who volunteered for the war. It was intended that the Legion should serve as a unit under that name and with its own device, the Canadian maple leaf combined with the Washington coat-of-arms; the publicity which the movement gained, however, embarrassed the American Government as a neutral power, and at its request the Canadian Government dissolved the Legion and absorbed its elements in Canadian divisions. Burr went to England with the rank of captain, but there at his own request reverted to lieutenant in order to be able to get to the front sooner; he was to win his grade of captain again in the field. He served with the 38th Battalion, Fourth Canadian Division, in the fierce fighting at Vimy Ridge in April 1917, in the fighting around Lens where he was wounded on June 26, and in the attack on Passchendaele, where he was wounded again on October 30. He was then evacuated to a hospital in England, and in January 1918 was sent home on leave.

He gives an interesting touch in his account of his experiences: "We went over at 7 a. m., and everything went splendidly. I got one Prussian Guardsman myself. He had a brother in San Bernardino, California, and couldn't get over his surprise that there were Americans in Canadian uniforms."

Major Davis enlisted in the American Legion in Canada in March 1916, Engineering Corps, and was transferred to the 11th Battalion, Railway Troops. He landed in France early in 1917 and fought in the battle of Vimy Ridge in April, at Passchendaele in June, and at Cambrai in November. He was awarded the Distinguished Service Order. There were doubtless other and unrecorded cases of former students serving in French and British armies before we entered the war. In fact, Captain Burr, on his visit to the campus early in 1918, mentioned two other Ohio State men as serving in the Canadian forces.

The first Ohio State man to lose his life in the service overseas was Thomas Barrett, Agr. '19. He was in the first Aviation unit to arrive in France, and went into training at the flying field at Tours, June 2, 1917. On June 29 the plane in which he and his instructor were flying, caught fire from the explosion of the gasoline tank at 1000 feet and fell in flames, killing them both.

Several of our men got into action early by volunteering for ambulance work with the Allied armies. Professor Walter Pierce, of the Department of Romance Languages, had been in France in the summer of 1916 working in the Red Cross Hospital at Neuilly, Paris; returning home in the autumn, he communicated to others his enthusiasm for this service. In June 1917 he returned to France on a year's leave, and was accompanied by Professor Albert Chandler, of the Department of Philosophy, James F.-J. Fullington, B.A. '16, Carl MacMillan, B.A. '21, Thomas Malone Magruder, B.A. '21, and William McKinley Johnson, B.A. '14.

Professors Pierce and Chandler worked for a time as orderlies in the Neuilly Hospital. Later Professor Pierce became chief translator on General Pershing's Staff, with the rank of lieutenant, while Professor Chandler went to Italy to engage in civilian relief work for the Red Cross, with headquarters at Chioggia. The others were soon at work in the French Army.

Magruder first volunteered in the French Army; in September 1917 he was taken into the Ambulance Service of the American Army and attached as ambulance driver to the French Army. In late August and September he worked at the front in the great French drive on the Chemin des Dames, by which this ridge along the Aisne was wrested from the Germans. The high hopes of the French Army at the end of 1917 are reflected in this paragraph from one of his letters:

"You no doubt read of our big attack on the Aisne, October 23 to 28. It was a wonderful success, but it was not surprising after the terrible six-day bombardment by the French artillery. The first wave went over at 5:15 Tuesday morning and it was our men—the great Zouaves. For three days we were going as hard as possible, night and day. The only time we stopped was for gasoline, when the mechanics filled up while we drank soup and coffee. It was a wonderful attack, but it had its price; I have seen stacks of mangled dead bodies, my ambulance dripping with blood, and wounded men crawling along the road."

Fullington also saw hard and dangerous service in 1917. He was in the American Ambulance Service with the French. He describes his work on the French front in October at Verdun, in letters home, which unfortunately there is not space to quote at length. His unit in the course of three weeks' heavy fighting carried 2200 wounded from the front to the field hospitals. At the end of that time there was scarcely a car that had not been injured or wrecked. He tells of driving with wounded over roads that had just been "resurfaced" by the spray of dirt from shells landing near it; of driving in pitch dark with lights prohibited and having to repair tires and damages under those conditions; of having to jump from his machine to a shelter to escape concentrated shelling, and similar experiences. Like many who went through the experience of shell fire he gives his impression of its effect, and it would be difficult to find a more realistic description. Telling the incident in which he was forced to take shelter from the shelling, he says:

"I can understand now very well why shell-fire demoralizes a man. We were in a safe dug-out, the shells were not meant for us, and yet when we left the place our nerves were badly shaken. An 'arrive', or shell coming in, has a peculiar sound. It starts with a faint whine, growing louder, and then, if it lands close, it shrieks right up to you and ends with a bang. If it goes overhead the final shriek isn't so bad. The final bang also varies, depending on its size and on what it hits. A small 77 or 105 just bangs, or, if it hits soft dirt, goes 'splud'; a 150 or 220 gives a crash like dropping an iron rail on a pile of rails; and a 300 is indescribable. It makes a messy explosion and sounds like the end of things."

Fullington was the first Ohio State man to receive the Croix de Guerre, awarded in December 1917 for courage and devotion on the days of November 24 and 25.

MacMillan also was in the American Ambulance Service with the French Army in 1917. He then became civilian translator at G.H.Q., Chaumont, and still later was sent to England to get his training for the Tank Corps; he was to serve as tank commander on the British front in the last phase of the war.

Johnson joined the Munitions Transportation Service of the French Army, which included a section of American volunteer drivers recruited from the colleges and universities. Johnson was with the California University section. He served with this organization from June to December 1917, and then went to Italy in the American Ambulance Service with the Italian Army, where he worked until May 1918. The rest of his two years overseas he served in the 78th Light Artillery of the Sixth Division.

Other Ohio State men in the Ambulance Service at the front, in 1917, were Kenneth Norton, B.A. '16, in the French Ambulance Service with the French Army at Verdun, in September and October, and then in the American Ambulance Service, and Carey R. Evans, Arts '18, who was with the French Army in the fall of 1917 and was to lose his life in that service in April 1918.

OHIO STATE MEN IN THE GERMAN DRIVE OF MARCH 1918

When the Germans opened their campaign of 1918 with the great drive at Amiens, in March, there were no American divisions ready for divisional action. There were, however, some Americans engaged in this campaign, and among them a few Ohio State men.

The drive began on March 21; it was directed at the southern end of the British line between Arras and La Fere, with the object of driving the point of the wedge in to Amiens, and so severing the connection of the British and French armies. In overwhelming force the Germans smashed through the British first lines, drove forward over the old Somme battlefields, and advanced the point of the salient as far as Albert. They were not able to reach Amiens, nor completely to separate the British and French. A French Army, hastily formed of reserves and pushed forward to the line south of Amiens, prevented the front from being actually broken. By the beginning of April the front had become fairly stable along a deeply indented line running from Arras to Albert, to a little west of Montdidier, and south of Noyon, both of which were in German hands. This action, from March 21 to April 8, is known as the Somme defensive.

The first Ohio State man to fall in battle on the Western front was Stanley Mauck, Engr. '15, of the 6th Regiment, Engineers, who went into the trenches with his regiment before Amiens on March 21, just as the German attack began, and was killed by a shell on March 30. Leland Biery, Engr. '18, was also in the 6th Engineers in this engagement.

The second of our men to fall in action was Carey R. Evans, Arts '18. He enlisted in the American Ambulance Service in May 1917, and landed in France in September. In March 1918 he was working with the French Army that was sent up to help hold the line south of Amiens. These troops were rushed in to support the British Third Corps, which was being driven back on Noyon and Montdidier. The French troops with the remnants of the British Third Corps were forced to fall back beyond Noyon. Evans was driving his ambulance in this terrific fighting around Noyon from March 23; on the night of April 5 he had brought his ambulance up to an advanced station near the front at Passel to carry back French wounded, when a German shell struck the car, killing him and two of his stretcher bearers.

Other Ohio State men were in Ambulance Service in the field in this action. E. Sterling Nichol, Arts '17, first lieutenant, landed in France in January 1918; in March and April his ambulance unit was in the Somme defensive about Noyon, and was cited in the Division Orders of the Twelfth French Division. Fullington, Magruder, and Kenneth Norton, already noticed as engaged in this work in 1917, were also in the fighting near Noyon in March and April 1918. Dr. Edwin Rose, M.D. '17, captain in the Medical Corps, had been attached to the Birmingham War Hospital of the British Army until March 1918; in the Somme defensive he served in the Field Ambulance of the 1st British Cavalry. Dr. William Fenker, M.D. '14, captain in the Medical Corps, was attached to the Royal Welsh Fusileers, and was gassed in this action.

Although this front was stabilized early in April, there were sporadic outbreaks of fierce fighting for several weeks, due to the efforts of one side or the other to improve local positions. Sterling's ambulance unit was soon withdrawn to take part in the Champagne defensive; Fullington and Norton remained on this front and participated in the French advance which was to begin in August (the Noyon offensive).² Magruder, mentioned above for his service in 1917, was on this front in May. On the night of May 6 he injured his knee, but kept on driving his ambulance until his work was done. For this conduct he received the Croix de Guerre. He was in the hospital from May 8 to July 28, and returned to his unit in time to serve in the Noyon offensive in August.

ARRIVAL AND TRAINING OF AMERICAN DIVISIONS³

The arrival of American troops in divisional strength began in June 1917, when the First Division landed in France. The Second, Twenty-Sixth, and Forty-Second arrived during the succeeding months of 1917. As elements of divisions landed they were sent forward to training camps. The general region fixed upon by the French and American commanders for these camps in France was the district west and south of Toul. This region was chosen as most directly accessible from the principal American debarkation ports of St. Nazaire, on the Loire, and Bordeaux, on the Garonne; it could be reached by main trunk lines without passing through Paris or other centers already congested by the needs of French and British armies. It was indicated also by the general plan of the American campaign, which was to put the American armies eventually in charge of the Lorraine front.

The first camp center was at Gondrécourt; as divisions multiplied, the whole region was dotted with army camps until by the end of the war twenty-one divisional camps were found there. The G.H.Q. of the American army was at Chaumont, in this area. Artillery camps, requiring firing ranges, were separated from the Infantry training camps. The first Artillery camp was at Le Valdahon, near Besancon; others established later were at Coetquidon and Meucon, in Brittany, and at Souge, near Bordeaux.

² The Noyon offensive was part of the general advance against the German lines, in which British, French and American armies were all engaged after the turn of the tide in July. Beginning early in August from Montdidier to Noyon, the French drove the Germans back to their old line. Noyon was recovered by the French on August 29.

³ The division is the unit commonly used, in the American as in other armies, in estimating the numbers and describing the movements of troops. The American division numbered about 1000 officers and 27,000 men. It comprised two infantry brigades of two regiments each, and the necessary units of other arms such as artillery, engineers, pioneers, signal corps, etc.

The general plan of preparation, used especially for early divisions, was as follows: After training in camp for several weeks, the division was sent forward to a quiet sector to get an experience of front line action as a part of a British or French Army corps. After a few weeks of this it was regrouped in camp for divisional maneuvers, and then sent to occupy its regular sector of the front as a division. So, for example, the First Division went into camp at Gondrécourt in July 1917; in September it went forward to the Sommervillers sector, near Nancy, with the French Army; here it remained until the end of November. Returning to camp at Gondrécourt, it was polished off for action and in January 1918 took over a sector north of Toul (the southern Woivre district), relieving a French Moroccan division. Here it remained until April, when it was relieved by the Twenty-Sixth. After a short rest it was moved up to an active front near Amiens. Other early divisions, the Twenty-Sixth, Second, and Forty-Second, underwent similar experiences. The character of this early experience of action by divisions is illustrated by a few examples from the individual records of our men.

The First Division was in the Sommervillers sector from September to November 1917. Henry H. Copeland, B.A. '13, first lieutenant in the 6th Field Artillery, claims for this regiment the distinction of firing the first American shot in the war. Paul W. Austin, B.A. '16, notes that he participated in the burial of the first three American soldiers to fall on the Western front. These casualties were the result of a raid undertaken by the Germans on the American trenches, November 3, for the purpose of securing prisoners and information. After preliminary bombardment a detachment of German Infantry made an attack and there was hand-to-hand fighting in our trenches, three Americans being killed, eleven wounded, and eleven carried off as prisoners. These first three American soldiers to fall in battle were buried with military honors on November 6, the ceremonies being attended by a guard of French infantrymen and by a detachment from the American Division.

The Twenty-Sixth Division relieved the First in this sector on April 3. On April 17 it was involved in a bombardment and raid by the Germans and made a counter-attack which assumed the proportions of a battle. This appears in the records as the battle of Seichepray. Boyd O. Bach, Engr. '18, of the Twenty-Sixth, and Captain Charles H. Keck, of the 51st Coast Artillery, report participation in this battle, in which Captain Keck was wounded by shell-fire on April 21. It may be regarded as certain that others were present whose record cards do not mention the action.⁴

The Forty-Second (Rainbow) Division was at the front in the Vosges Mountains, at Lunéville and Baccarat, from February 21 to June 20, 1918. Colonel Benson W. Hough, LL.B. '99, was in command of the 166th Regiment, which included most of the Ohio State men in the division; he was awarded the Croix de Guerre in April after four weeks in the trenches. Paul Keller, Engr. '18, was wounded on his first day in the trenches, March 12. Early in May the division undertook a local offensive, known as the Bois de Chien raid; three of our men mention this affair: First Lieutenant Leon W. Miesse, Engr. '11, Second Lieutenant William F. Busch, Engr. '15, and Private Harry Wolf, Engr. '08, who was wounded there. Robert S. Postle, Pharm. '14, captain in the Medical Corps, was gassed in the Baccarat sector on May 27. The story is told of Harold Powell, B.A., LL.B. '12, that on a scouting expedition in No Man's Land he ran into several German soldiers, took them prisoner, and made them march back in front of him to his own line.

⁴ Most of the Ohio State men in the Twenty-Sixth, a New England division, were transferred to it later from the Eighty-Third, a replacement division; this also accounts in part for the fact that the battle of Seichepray does not figure in more of our records.

ARMY SCHOOLS IN FRANCE

An important element in the training of the American Army was the organization of Army Schools and Officers' Training Camps in France. From the statements on our records it appears that some of our men went into such schools immediately on arrival in France, but many were evidently selected out after undergoing experience in the line and sent to these schools to fit them for commissions and special services. Most of these were able to get back into the fighting and render valuable service in the great campaigns of September and October.

The principal center of Army Schools was at Langres, where were located the Army School of the Line, Army Candidates' School, Machine Gun School, Engineer School, Signal School, and others. There was also an Infantry Candidates' School at La Valbonne, opened in October for a three months' course, but the end of the war came before the first class was graduated.

Artillery Schools were located at Saumur; for Field Artillery, at Mailly and then at Angers; for Heavy Artillery, at Chatillon-sur-Seine; for Coast and Tractor Artillery, at Vincennes.

Schools for more specialized training mentioned in our records were: Signal Corps School at St. Aignan, at Le Mans, and at Chatillon-sur-Seine; Intelligence Schools at Chateaux-Montaille and at La Milease; Army Motor School at Le Blanc; Telephone School at Clermont-Ferrand; Balloon School at Bordeaux; Rifle School at St. Aubepierre, etc.

Officers' Training Schools were also maintained at the training camps in which divisions were placed. There were schools at Army Corps Headquarters in the general training area already mentioned: First Corps Schools at Gondrecourt, Second Corps School at Chatillon-sur-Seine, and Third Corps School at Clamecy. Artillery Officers' Training Schools were established at the artillery camps of Le Valdahon, Souge, Meucon, and Coetquidon.

A Part of 82,000 Men at Mess Time, Camp Pontanezen, Brest, France.

A German Prisoner Detail at Brest.

Aviation Schools of many sorts were attended by Ohio State men. Most of them were either at the Second Aviation Instruction Center at Tours, or the Third Aviation Instruction Center at Issoudun. Other schools attended were: Bombing Training School at Clermont-Ferrand, Aerial Gunnery School at Cazaux, Artillery Observation School at Chatillon-sur-Seine, Bombing School (Caproni Squadron) at Foggia, Italy; and the British School of Navigation and Bomb Dropping at Andover, England.

A feature of the Army Schools in France in which the University may justly take pride is the number of our men used as instructors. The following list is believed to be fairly complete:

Brigadier General Edward Siegerfoos, B.Ph. '91, was director of the Army School of the Line at Langres from June to September 1918. His death in the field after he took command of his brigade is told later. Harley E. Banks, Cert. in Agr. '15, was instructor in this school for one month.

Lieutenant Robert Bohannon, Engr. '19, was graduated with distinction from the Artillery School at Saumur and was appointed motor instructor at the Heavy Artillery School at Angers. He was ordered to the front, but the colonel in charge of the school telegraphed headquarters asking authority to hold him as instructor. Lieutenant William G. Kearney, Engr. '17, of the Motor Transport Corps, was also instructor at Angers.

Captain James S. Ervin, Engr. '10, was Assistant Director of the Tractor Artillery School from January to May 1918.

Lieutenant Ralph Heinzen, Arts '15, was commandant and senior instructor in the Intelligence School at Chateaux-Montaille.

Lieutenant Grayson W. Gill, Engr. '15, was instructor in the Observers' School of the Second Aviation Instruction Center at Tours.

Lieutenant Daniel P. Forst, Engr. '17, was instructor in reconnaissance and orientation in the Observers' School at Camp Le Valdahon.

Major Edwin Kelton, Engr. '13, of the Regular Army, was director of the Engineer School in the Second and Third Corps Schools.

Sergeant Herman L. Freutz, Engr. '19, was on detached duty as instructor in bombing and automatic weapons in the First and Second Corps Schools.

Lieutenant Ellsworth Shriver, M.E. '14, was instructor in military mining and military railroad engineering in the Third Corps School.

Lieutenant Donald E. Leader, B.Sc. in Hort. '18, was instructor in musketry at the Third Corps School.

Lieutenant Harry B. Budd, Agr. '16, was instructor in gas defense at the First Corps School.

Lieutenant Ray Gottschall, B.A. '16, was in charge of aerial gunnery instruction at the Third Aviation Instruction Center at Issoudun.

Lieutenant Harrison Barringer, B.A. '11, LL.B. '13, was instructor in Stokes Mortars and 37 mm. guns at the Artillery School at Chatillon-sur-Seine.

CHAPTER III

CAMPAIGNS OF THE AMERICAN ARMY

By EDGAR HOLMES MCNEAL

BATTLE OF CANTIGNY, MAY 28

One result of the disaster to the Allied line in front of Amiens, in March, was the unification of command. The American Government and the American commander had favored this action from the first of our entrance into the war. Finally, on March 27, agreement was reached between the British and French authorities, and General Foch was named commander-in-chief of the Allied Armies on the Western front. General Pershing gave expression to the American approval of this step by going to the G.H.Q. of General Foch on the following day and placing all the American troops at his disposal. General Pershing, however, was strong in his opinion that American divisions should as far as possible be regarded as units and, where several were engaged, should be placed side by side; he looked forward to the time when those divisions should form an American Army, carrying out its own campaign as part of the larger campaign of the Allied commander-in-chief.

Following this action of General Pershing in placing the American troops at the disposal of the Allied commander, the First Division¹ was sent, on April 25, to the front of the Fifth French Army, south of Amiens, where it took over a sector near Montdidier, relieving two Moroccan divisions.

As already noted, the main German drive in this region had come to a pause early in April and the front was fairly stable, although still subject to local outbreaks of activity from either side. The French Army had taken over the front, the British forces having been withdrawn to be sent north where the second great drive of the Germans was taking place south of Ypres.

The line held by the American First Division included the section in front of the heights of Cantigny, from which the Germans commanded the immediate region and from which they kept up a troublesome fire. At the end of May the First Division was instructed to take this important local position and on May 28 carried out its instructions in dashing style. The strongly held village of Cantigny was taken by the 28th Regiment and the division line was consolidated to hold it. The Germans counter-attacked with great fierceness and determination, but were not able to dislodge our troops.

There were, all told, at one time and another, 22 Ohio State men in the First Division. Some of these were transferred to this division from troops that arrived later in the year, but there must have been several of our men present at Cantigny. Only two records mention the battle by name. Private Fred Innis, Engr. '18, of the 28th Infantry, took part in the capture of the village of Cantigny and notes that the regiment was later given the distinction of the Fourragere by the French commander for this action. First Lieutenant Henry Copeland, of the 6th Field Artillery, also mentions participation in the engagement of Cantigny. Vernon P. Hine, B.Sc. in Bus. Adm. '21, private in the First Division, was gassed and burned by liquid fire in May on this front; and Captain Averill Pfeifer, Arts '17, of the 18th Infantry, was slightly wounded on May 15.

This engagement had more than a local significance. Earlier contacts on sectors held by American troops had given the Germans a taste of American fighting qualities. The battle of Cantigny showed what they could do in a definite offensive. The German High Command could no longer deny the evidence that America was in the war and that Americans could fight.

THE CHAMPAGNE DEFENSIVE—CHATEAU-THIERRY,
JUNE AND JULY

The first of the great German drives had been aimed at Amiens on March 21; the second at the Channel ports on April 9—both of them at portions of the British line. Neither had accomplished its object, but in each case a dangerous bulge had been made in the line which was firmly held by the Germans and was capable of disastrous exploitation by them if they could maintain their preponderance. The third drive was aimed directly at Paris. Massing great numbers of troops with machine guns and artillery back of their front along the Aisne, the German High Command on May 26 launched a tremendous blow at the French line along a thirty-mile front. The German forces in vastly superior numbers swarmed over the Chemin des Dames, crossed the Aisne, the Vesle, and the Ourcq rivers, and reached the Marne at Chateau-Thierry. Soissons on the right of the Germans fell into their hands; Rheims on their left was not taken, but was dangerously surrounded by the advance of the German line to the east and the west of it.

The French, worn out by a week of terrible fighting, had exhausted the reserves available in this region, and the rapidity of the German advance created a critical situation; for the point of the drive on May 31 was less than fifty miles from Paris, with the open road of the Marne valley ahead. Under these conditions the Americans were called on to throw in at the point of the thrust such troops as could be brought into action.

The Third Division, which had just completed its training in the Chateau-Villain area and was on the point of being sent forward to take over a sector, was hurried forward instead to the front of Chateau-Thierry. Part of this division, the motorized machine gun battalion, arrived at the front by motor trucks on the night of May 31 and helped hold the bridges of the Marne. The infantry regiments arrived on June 1, and on this and the succeeding days were engaged in fierce fighting in and around Chateau-Thierry, keeping the Germans from advancing beyond the town. Several Ohio State men were in the action of the Third Division at this point. Clinton Allen, B.Sc. in Bus. Adm. '21, was wounded here on June 3.

The Second Division distinguished itself at Chateau-Thierry.² This division included two regiments of the Regular Army, the 9th and 23d, and a brigade of Marines, the 5th and 6th Regiments. It had occupied a sector at Les Esparges, near Verdun, in March and April, and was back in training camp when it was ordered to the front at Chateau-Thierry. Arriving on June 1 and 2, the division was placed across the road that runs from Chateau-Thierry to Paris at the very point of the German drive. Here the division not only blocked the German advance, but began immediately a counter-attack. The Marines on the right of the road were sent forward on June 6 to take the strongly held position of Belleau Wood. On that day they took the village of Bouresches and secured a foothold in Belleau Wood. Willis W. Rummel, Agr. '16, private in the 5th Marines, was wounded by a machine gun bullet in this day's action. The Germans fought desperately to retain this important position and the Marines had to go back again and again through the difficult ground against machine gun nests and artillery fire. By the end of June the wood was cleared of the enemy and occupied by American troops.³ Lester Bowron. Engr. '15, was gassed here on June 14. Erwin Danford, Arts '17, sergeant in the 5th Marines, was mortally wounded in Belleau Wood on June 25 and died in the hospital July 23. Raymond Howell, Engr. '15, private in the 5th Marines, was severely wounded on the same day and was in the hospital three and a half months. There were also several Ohio State men in the infantry regiments of the Third Division; this brigade also counter-attacked after holding the Germans on the Chateau-Thierry road, and took the village of Vaux on July 1 in fine style. The Second Division was withdrawn on July 10, and relieved by the Twenty-Sixth.

² We had 23 men, according to our records, in the famous Second Division. The majority were in the Marine Brigade.

On July 15 the Germans started a new offensive in this region, which was destined to be their last. This was an attempt to enlarge the Marne salient by an attack in force east and west of Reims. East of Reims the Forty-Second Division was in line with French troops. This division, the famous "Rainbow Division," contained a considerable body of Ohio State men; 62 record cards give this division. It had been in the front line in the Lunéville and Baccarat sectors from February 21 to June 20. Arriving on the front east of Reims on July 5, it was engaged on July 15 in repelling the German drive. The complete failure of this offensive marked the turning point in the war. Several of our men in the Forty-Second record participation in this critical action of July 15 to July 18. Colonel Hough, as has been noted, was in command of the 166th Infantry; First Lieutenant (later Captain) Leon Miesse, of the 166th, was also in this engagement. George Wegner, B. Arch. Engr. '21, of the 149th Field Artillery, was wounded on July 15, and Sergeant Harry Wolf, of the 166th Infantry, was wounded on July 17.

The Third Division, which had been engaged earlier at Chateau-Thierry, was in line with the French west of Reims. Early in July First Lieutenant Barrett Brown, Arts '18, was cited in General Orders of the division for his conduct in action on this front. On July 15 the Third Division found itself in the direct line of this German offensive, and did its part in the resistance which stopped the Germans in their tracks. Russell Pounce, Agr. '20, private in the 7th Infantry, was killed in this action on July 15. Major (later Lieutenant Colonel) Fred L. Walker, M.E. '11, of the Regular Army, in the 30th Infantry, was given the D. S. C. for conduct in action on July 15. Harrison E. Barringer, second lieutenant in the 30th Infantry, was made prisoner by the Germans in the beginning of this drive on July 15, while leading a patrol in No Man's Land, and remained in German prison camp until the end of the war.

These defensive actions from the first of June to the middle of July are usually known as the Champagne defensive. It is impossible to make out from the records how many Ohio State men were engaged. Only 40 cards mention the Champagne defensive or some part of it by name; but a good many more must have been present whose records do not give the fact, for the divisions engaged contained all told at one time or another about 140 of our men.

THE "SECOND MARNE," JULY 18 TO SEPTEMBER 6

The successful blocking of the last German offensive at Reims was followed immediately by a powerful counter-offensive. The object was the wiping out of the deep pocket which the Germans in May had driven into the line toward Paris. Starting on July 18, the objectives were virtually gained by August 6; the Germans were driven out of the salient and the line was straightened out along the Vesle and Aisne Rivers from Soissons to Reims.

In this campaign the American weight made itself felt in a serious way. Taking into account all the phases of this action in July and August, nine American Divisions, totaling over 250,000 men, were engaged. These divisions were incorporated in the Sixth and Tenth French Armies.

At the start of the offensive on July 18, the American divisions were lined up around the salient from left to right as follows: First and Second Divisions to advance east toward Soissons; the Fourth to advance east along the Ourcq River; the Twenty-Sixth and the Third, with the Twenty-Eighth in reserve, to advance north from Chateau-Thierry.

The First and Second Divisions in their advance south of Soissons (which appears in our records as the Battle of Soissons, July 18 to 22) met fierce resistance, but drove forward to the limit of their objectives.

Captain Frank Mason, B.A. '15, of the 9th Infantry, Second Division, records these impressions of the start of this offensive: "This very nice paper I am writing on belonged to a German soldier, but I got it today ten kilometers in the German lines. After lying in the mud all night in the rain, I went over the top with my regiment today at 5 a. m. Going over the top in an affair like this is a very ordinary proceeding, and I didn't feel any special sensations; the sensations came when I learned about three days ago that I was to go. It was a wonderful sight at 5 a. m. just before dawn. It stopped raining for a few minutes; the lines of Americans going across the meadow, then changing into Indian file as they threaded their way through the barbed wire, seen in glimpses by the light of the flares and the phosphorous shells that burst in a spray of fire. The air was a den of a thousand noises—shrieks, groans and whistles of the shells and bullets (all the different size weapons make different noises). There was absolutely no chance to distinguish an arriving Boche shell in that bedlam. Our men were marvelous. They advanced just as if they were in a maneuver with blank cartridges, instead of the real thing. When we would hear the din-din-din of the Boche machine gun—which makes one think of someone beating on a tin pan with a stick—the men dropped until a few had put the gun out of action."

In this action Captain Mason received a French citation for conspicuous gallantry before Chateau-Thierry, was given the Croix de Guerre, and promoted from first lieutenant to captain.

Captain Samuel Anderson, B.Ch.E. '17, of the 23d Infantry, Second Division, and Private Sidney Goldstein, B.Sc. in Agr. '20, of the 6th Marines, were wounded here on July 18. Delmer Settle, Engr. '18, private in the 26th Infantry, First Division, was mortally wounded on July 20, dying in the hospital on August 16. Second Lieutenant Lawrence Andrews, B.A. '20, and First Lieutenant Harry Haymes, B.Sc. in Agr. '17, both of the First Division, were wounded near Soissons on July 21. Captain Cyril J. Carder, Engr. '18, of the 16th Infantry, First Division, was killed on July 22. The First, Second, and Fourth Divisions, having completed their advance, were withdrawn on July 22.

The Twenty-Sixth and Third Divisions were to advance north from the Marne. The Twenty-Sixth pushed forward until July 25, when it was relieved by the Forty-Second. The Third, starting from the Marne just below Chateau-Thierry on the night of July 20, pushed the enemy back until it was relieved on July 30. Anthony Shebanek, B.Sc. in Hort. '14, second lieutenant, 38th Infantry, Third Division, was wounded in this advance on July 22, and Captain John Hamilton, B.A. '16, of the 10th Field Artillery, was gassed at Charteves about the same time; he received the Croix de Guerre for his conduct in this action.

The Thirty-Second relieved the Third on July 30 and continued the advance until the Vesle River was reached and Fismes captured; it was then relieved on August 6. During this advance John H. Millholen, Engr. '21, private in the 147th Field Artillery, attached to the Thirty-Second, was badly gassed in front of Fismes on August 13; he was cited for "distinguished and exceptional gallantry."

The Forty-Second had relieved the Twenty-Sixth on July 25, and continued to advance until August 2, when it was relieved. Colonel Benson W. Hough was in command of the 166th Infantry in this as in its other engagements. Dr. Franklin Postle, Arts-Law '15, captain in the Medical Corps, serving with this division, was gassed on July 19 before the division got into action. Lee Hopper, sergeant, was gassed in the attack on Serpy, July 28. Walter Elhardt, Agr. '18, with the band of the 166th Infantry, was severely wounded on July 28. Private Owen Barr, Agr. '17, was mortally wounded at Seringes on August 2, dying the next day. Harley F. Shaefer, Agr. '18, top sergeant in the 166th, was wounded on August 3. Sergeant Peter Weiss, Arts '19, was cited for his conduct in this action. Second Lieutenant Karl S. McComb, B.Sc. in Agr. '16, was killed on the night of August 12 by a German sniper.

The Fourth Division, which was sent back into action to relieve the Forty-Second on August 2, advanced along side the Thirty-Second to the Vesle River. Donald W. Glenn, Arts '20, private in the Fourth, was slightly wounded on the Vesle River, August 3. These two divisions, the Fourth and Thirty-Second, were relieved on the Vesle by the Seventy-Seventh and Twenty-Eighth, which held this line until early in September, when they advanced as part of a general forward movement of the French line, which put the Germans definitely back of the Aisne to about the line from which they had started their drive in May.

At the end of August, the Thirty-Second, which had been relieved on August 6, was again sent forward, this time to join the Tenth French Army in an offensive against the German lines north of Soissons; here it was engaged in severe fighting from August 27 to September 1. Several of our men report participation in this action, which prepared for the recovery of Soissons from the Germans later.

Other branches of the fighting forces were present in this first large engagement of American troops, notably the Aviation. The 27th Aero Squadron played an important part in the campaign. Fred Norton, B.Sc. in For. '17, whose story will be told later⁴ was killed on July 23 in this region, while leading his flight against a German squadron. Walter B. Wanamaker, Law '17, of the 27th, was shot down in an air combat here; he figured in the reports of July 28 as missing and probably killed, but was later heard from in a German prison camp. Richard C. Martin, Arts '17, of the 27th, was also engaged in combat in the Chateau-Thierry region during this campaign. Walter E. Avery, Arts '14, of the 95th Aero Squadron, brought down the noted German ace, Captain Mendkopf, in his first aerial combat of July 26, near Chateau-Thierry. Harry D. Sheets, B.Sc. in For. '15, was with the French Escadrille 280 at Chateau-Thierry until August 1.

This counter-offensive on the Marne was participated in by two British divisions, on the right of the line between the Marne and Reims. In one of these, a Highland Scots division, was an Ohio State man, John J. DeVereaux, Ph.G. '04; he was captain in the Medical Corps and was attached to this Scots division. He was gassed in this attack and was in the hospital for some time, but returned to his work in time to take part in the Somme offensive of the British Army in September, this time with a Lowland Scots division.

The records of 78 of our men definitely mention this campaign, but we may be sure that there were a good many more engaged in it.

THE ST. MIHIEL CAMPAIGN, SEPTEMBER 12 TO 16

By the victory on the Marne the offensive had passed into the hands of the Allies; they were never to relinquish it until the end of the war. It was now the turn of the Allied High Command to envisage the possibility of ending the war by force of arms in 1918. The time had also come for the organization of a separate American Army; for this purpose most of the divisions which had seen active service, and also those which were regarded as ready for action, were incorporated in the First American Army, General Pershing commanding.

The first exploit of this army was the reduction of the St. Mihiel salient, that provoking wedge which the Germans had driven in south of Verdun in the fall of 1914, and which they had maintained ever since. The plan of employing the American forces for this purpose when they should be ready for separate action had been agreed upon early in the discussions between the American commander-in-chief and the commander of the French armies.

Three army corps, including nine divisions and two in reserve, constituted the American First Army in this enterprise. On the western flank of the salient, the Fourth and the Twenty-Sixth Division, with one French division, were to strike east; on the southern flank, seven divisions, from left to right the First, Forty-Second, Eighty-Ninth, Second, Fifth, Ninetieth, and Thirty-Second, were to advance north. The Eighty-Second, at Pont-à-Mousson on the Moselle, was to act as the pivot of the southern line, swinging around to face northeast as the general line advanced. The Third Division and the Seventy-Eighth were in reserve.

The assault was started at 5 a. m., September 12, and the issue was decided on the first day. The enemy had been preparing for a withdrawal from the salient, but was caught by the sudden attack and forced to turn and fight. On the first day the Twenty-Sixth from the west and the First from the south met at their objective, the village of Vigneulles. Lawrence Yerges, B.A. '16, who was later to fall in the Meuse-Argonne campaign, was corporal in a machine gun battalion of the Twenty-Sixth which carried its guns twelve miles through the forest at 5 o'clock on the morning of September 12, in order to get ahead of the drive and help close the line of escape by Vignuelles.

The Forty-Second pushed north through the town of Pannes. Neil Merrill, Agr. '16, private in the 166th Infantry, was wounded on the first day in this advance.

The Eighty-Ninth met fierce resistance in its advance through Euvezin to the center of the salient. Colonel (later Brigadier General) Charles E. Kilbourne, Engr. '93, was chief of staff of the division in this engagement. Herbert E. Christianity, Engr. '15, first lieutenant in the Eighty-Ninth, was killed on September 12; he was cited for gallantry in action and brilliant leadership on this occasion. Gideon Clark, Engr. '11, second lieutenant, was twice wounded in this day's fighting, and was in the hospital until November 11; he was cited by his regimental commander. Others wounded in this advance of the Eighty-Ninth, were Second Lieutenant Clarence Crossland, B.A. '20, and First Lieutenant Leon P. Shinn, Pharm. Cert. '09, who received the D. S. C. and the Croix de Guerre.

The Second, Fifth, and Ninetieth pushed north past Thiaucourt into the heart of the salient during the first days of the fight. Stanley Bowman, Agr. '17, sergeant in the 17th Machine Gun Battalion, Fifth Division, who was later killed in the Meuse-Argonne, was cited for his conduct in this advance. His citation reads:

"He displayed great initiative and most exceptional bravery, saving a platoon to which he was attached from annihilation. Seeing the platoon cut off by heavy machine gun fire, he moved his guns forward, opened up and neutralized the enemy fire, which enabled the platoon to withdraw."

William H. Rabe, Engr. '17, first lieutenant in the 14th Machine Gun Battalion, Fifth Division, was cited for distinguished conduct in this action. William Bancroft, Arts '18, second lieutenant in the 19th Field Artillery, was gassed here.

In addition to the men in divisions, there were other Ohio State men present in the St. Mihiel. Evacuation Hospitals 11, 12, and 14, and Hospital Unit 59 are mentioned by our men as participating in this action. The 96th Aero Squadron was active here. In this squadron, Second Lieutenant Louis C. Simon, Agr. '15, brought down his second enemy plane here; Joseph Haskins, former instructor in Chemistry, was pilot on a bombing plane serving here, and Captain Harold David Young, Engr. '19, was also engaged here with this squadron. Other Ohio State aviators engaged in the St. Mihiel were: Walter W. Randolph, Arts '20, of the 93th Aero Squadron; Doyen P. Wardwell, C. and J. '18, of the 185th Aero Squadron; and Harry D. Sheets, with the 135th Aero Squadron. The Coast Artillery was in this action, supporting the attack with its long range guns. Captain Keck, of the 51st, who had been wounded at Seichepray and had served in the Second Marne, was here in the St. Mihiel, as was also Max S. Howard, Agr. '21, of the 52nd.

The records of 105 of our men mention the St. Mihiel campaign, and as already noted this number is probably very incomplete. The rapidity of the advance resulted in the capture of 16,000 prisoners and great quantities of material. The salient was entirely wiped out and the American front stretched in a straight line across the base of the triangle. It was one of the most clean-cut operations of the war, and was calculated to enhearten our Allies and dishearten the enemy by its demonstration of the technical capacity of the American command in all its branches, as well as of the fighting qualities of the American soldier.

THE MEUSE-ARGONNE CAMPAIGN, SEPTEMBER 26
TO NOVEMBER 11

The great contribution of the American Army to the general victory on the western front was the breaking of the German line in the Meuse-Argonne region. This region is defined by the valley of the Meuse River and the hilly wooded district of the Argonne Forest. It possessed strong natural defenses in the heights along the Meuse and in the rough country of the Argonne. It had been strengthened to great depth by artificial means, and was very strongly held by the German forces. Closely linked with the American offensive was the assault of the Fourth French Army on the German line in the Champagne west of the Argonne; two American divisions, the Second and the Thirty-Sixth, were engaged in this Champagne offensive.

The various phases of the campaign are tied together by the definite object at which it was directed, the driving of the Germans back of the Meuse and the capture of Sedan. To appreciate what it meant for those who took part in it, however, it is necessary to study it by sections.

THE FIRST ADVANCE: MONTFAUCON—SEPTEMBER 26 TO 29

At the jump-off on September 26, the nine American divisions which were to make the attack were lined up from the Aisne to the Meuse as follows: the Seventy-Seventh, Twenty-Eighth, and Thirty-Fifth, on the left; the Ninety-First, Thirty-Seventh, Seventy-Ninth, in the center; the Fourth, Eightieth, Thirty-Third, on the right, touching the Meuse. East of the Meuse was the Seventeenth French Corps, including one American division, the Twenty-Ninth; it acted as the pivot of the line and was not to advance until later. Liaison between the American Army and the Fourth French Army advancing in the Champagne west of the Argonne was maintained by some elements of the Ninety-Second (colored) Division.

The advance began early on the morning of September 26, and continued through September 29, constituting the first phase of the campaign. On the extreme left the "fighting Seventy-Seventh," a New York division, drove steadily forward into the Argonne, which had been regarded as impenetrable, the Twenty-Eighth keeping up with it on the right. In the center, the Ninety-First, Thirty-Seventh, and Seventy-Ninth advanced on Gesnes and Montfaucon. The Ninety-First twice got into Gesnes and twice was forced to fall back by German artillery fire and counter-attacks. The Seventy-Ninth and Thirty-Seventh both got into Montfaucon, which fell into our hands on September 29.

Most of the Ohio State men in this fighting were in the Thirty-Seventh, the old Ohio National Guard. In the advance on Montfaucon, Dr. Guthrie Burrell, '16, first lieutenant in the 112th Sanitary Train, was killed on September 26 by a German shell, while dressing the wounds of a member of his regiment, and Samuel Covert, Pharm. '16, with the Medical Detachment of the 146th Infantry, was shot by a German sniper on September 28, while performing the same service. Lincoln Russell, Engr. '18, also with the 112th Sanitary Train, was wounded in the first days of fighting. Sergeant Benjamin Barnes, Pharm. '13, with the Medical Detachment of the 146th Infantry, was cited for exceptional bravery and devotion to duty near Montfaucon on September 27; he was wounded a few days later on October 1. In the attack on Montfaucon, September 29, Jesse Lane, B.Sc. in Agr. '17, 148th Infantry, was cited for his conduct in action and promoted from corporal to sergeant; Lester Abele, Agr. '15, first lieutenant in the 148th Infantry, was wounded by shrapnel and gassed near Cierges; Kenneth French, Agr. '17, first lieutenant in the 145th Infantry, was wounded near Cierges; Corporal Benjamin J. Shiffman, Law '20, 145th Machine Gun Battalion, and First Lieutenant Alvin Waters, M.D. '96, Medical Detachment, 147th Infantry, were wounded; and Samuel Ackley, B.A. '18, 148th Infantry, received the D. S. C.

On the right, the Fourth, Eightieth, and Thirty-Third advanced toward the Meuse, reaching the Forest of Brioules. The Thirty-Third, on the extreme right of the line, pivoted so as to face east along the river. In this advance, Joseph LaCamera, Arts '20, in the Eightieth, and First Lieutenant Austin Lloyd, in the Fourth, were wounded on September 27. Alvin Seith, Pharm. '16, of the Eighty-Ninth (in reserve) was killed by a shell on September 29.

By the end of September every American division had reached its objective and the first and second German lines had been taken. The front now ran from Apremont in the Argonne, north of Ciegues and Montfaucon, to the southern edge of the Forest of Brioules on the Meuse. Fresh divisions had been brought up to relieve those that had suffered in the first assault; on September 30 the Thirty-Seventh was relieved by the Thirty-Second, the Seventy-Ninth by the Third. The First Division entered the line on October 1, and the Third on October 4. The Ninety-First was withdrawn for rest on October 4, the Thirty-Second extending its line to take in that section of the front.

SECOND ADVANCE, GRAND PRÉ, ROMAGNE,—OCTOBER 4 TO 31

The second phase of the campaign began on October 4, the front being held from left to right by the Seventy-Seventh and Twenty-Eighth, still in line in the Argonne, the Thirty-Fifth, First, Thirty-Second, Eightieth, Fourth, and Thirty-Third, the last facing along the Meuse. The Seventy-Seventh and Twenty-Eighth made a successful advance in the Argonne; by October 10 the Seventy-Seventh had taken Chevières and practically cleared the Argonne of the enemy. Second Lieutenant James P. Schrider, B.A. '14, received a divisional citation for conduct in this section. On October 15 the Seventy-Seventh, which had been in line since the beginning of the campaign and had fought its way clear through the Argonne Forest, was relieved by the Seventy-Eighth. This division advanced to the attack on Grand Pré and took it on October 16 and secured a foothold in the Loges Wood to the north. Vern P. Tester, Agr. '14, private in the 312th Infantry, was gassed on October 16 at Grand Pré; Jesse Wagner, Engr. '10, first lieutenant in the 308th Field Signal Battalion, was gassed and wounded in the fighting in Loges Wood, October 18; M. E. Gatewood, Agr. '17, sergeant in the 309th Machine Gun Battalion, was killed near Grand Pré, October 20.

The Eighty-Second Division came into line, relieving the Thirty-Fifth on October 7; on that day Brigadier General Edward Sigerfoos, B.Ph. '91, who had been director of the Army School of the Line at Langres and had just been put in command of the 56th Brigade, was mortally wounded less than 24 hours after taking over his command.

The advance of these divisions in the Argonne had been made possible by the rapid progress of the First Division, which protected their right flank. Corporal Howard Morrow, Agr. '20, 16th Infantry, was cited for gallantry in action during this action of the First Division. Richard Orth, B.C.E. '20, sergeant in the 26th Infantry, was wounded on October 5, and Ward C. Miller, Engr. '12, second lieutenant in the 18th Infantry, was wounded on October 6. On October 9 the First was relieved by the Forty-Second, which continued the advance beyond Sommerance to the third and last defensive line of the Germans. In the fighting around Sommerance, on October 26, Paul Edwards, B.Sc. in Agr. '17, was wounded and gassed, Captain John S. Stevenson, Engr. '17, 166th Infantry, was wounded, and Second Lieutenant George Wegner, B.Arch. Eng. '21, of the 149th Field Artillery, was gassed.

The Thirty-Second, advancing in the center against the strongest part of the German line, broke through the defense and captured Romagne on October 14. Second Lieutenant Carl Crites, Agr. '19, with the 322d Machine Gun Battalion, attached to the Thirty-Second Division, was killed in this action on October 10, and Second Lieutenant Edgar Hillyer, Engr. '19, in the 322d Field Artillery, was gassed on October 15. On the right of the Thirty-Second, the Third Division kept level with the advance. First Lieutenant Harvey Smith, B.Sc. in Agr. '17, was wounded on October 11; First Lieutenant Barrett Brown, cited in the Champagne defensive, was badly wounded here on October 12; and Corporal Carl Secrest, B.A., B.Sc. in Edu. '16, was mortally wounded here on October 13 while on detached duty with the Third Division, and died shortly after being admitted to the mobile hospital. First Lieutenant Charles J. Roach, M.D. '17, of the 4th Infantry, was wounded, October 16. Earl Rinnert, M.D. '16, first lieutenant in the Medical Corps in this division, was severely gassed during this campaign.

On the right of the line, the Fourth and Eightieth Divisions pushed forward toward the Meuse River. Second Lieutenant Thurman Flanagan, Arts '15, 58th Infantry, Fourth Division, and Daniel Kampf, Agr. '19, private in the 59th Infantry, were both killed on October 4, at the beginning of the offensive. Ralph Van Meter, B.Sc. in Hort. '17, sergeant in the 317th Field Signal Battalion, Eightieth Division, was cited for gallantry in action on October 20. The Fifth Division entered the line on October 10 to assist the Eightieth in the attack on Cunel, and continued to press toward the Meuse. Donald Slyh, Arts '19, first lieutenant in the 6th Infantry, Fifth Division, was wounded on October 12, and Manton Harwood, Engr. '18, also first lieutenant in the 60th Infantry, was severely wounded on October 14, and cited for exceptional bravery and coolness in action. Stanley Bowman, who had been cited in the St. Mihiel, was killed in this action on October 15.

IN THE CHAMPAGNE WITH THE FOURTH FRENCH ARMY

While the main action was being undertaken between the Meuse and the Argonne, American troops were also engaged in other related actions. On the west of the Argonne, between the Aisne River and Reims, the Fourth French Army advanced against the German lines. This Army included two American divisions, the Second and Thirty-Sixth, which participated in the attack on the heights known as the Blanc-Monts and the capture of the town of St. Etienne, the principal actions in this region. The Second was withdrawn on October 10 to recuperate and prepare for its part in the last phase of the Meuse-Argonne; the Thirty-Sixth remained in line with the French Army until the end of October. Lester Bowron of the 6th Marines, who had been gassed at Belleau Wood, in June, was wounded at Blanc-Monts, October 4, and Sidney Goldstein, of the 6th Marines, who had been wounded near Soissons in July, was wounded again here, October 8. Bernard Herman, Engr. '20, private in the 5th Marines, was also wounded on October 8. William West, Agr. '09, the only Ohio State man reported in the Thirty-Sixth,⁵ was killed at St. Etienne on October 7.

EAST OF THE MEUSE RIVER

East of the Meuse the 17th French Corps included the Twenty-Ninth and the Thirty-Third Divisions, the latter having been transferred across the river from its former place on the right of the American line. This corps began to advance east of the river on October 8, with the object of engaging the German forces in that region and protecting the right flank of the main advance. Captain Joseph Chubb, C.E., '04, was on the staff of the 104th Engineers, Twenty-Ninth Division, in this action. Captain George G. Hunter, M.D. '17, in the 104th Sanitary Train, was cited for bravery and devotion to duty.

On October 16 the Twenty-Sixth Division entered the line and advanced to the attack of the strong German position on the ridge of La Grande Montagne; terrific fighting occurred here in the Belleau Wood, which the Twenty-Sixth took on October 27. Corporal Lawrence Yerges, already mentioned in the St. Mihiel, was mortally wounded in this combat on October 23 and died the next day. The medical officer of his regiment, in a letter to Yerges' family, gave these facts about his death:

"This battalion went into action on the early morning of October 23, and during the early fighting was hard hit by a terrific return fire of the enemy. Many of our boys were killed or injured during the first few hours of the battle, and Corporal Yerges was probably one of the early victims. The shell fire was so terrific that for nearly two hours it was impossible for our litter-bearers to get the wounded to me, as my dressing station was in direct line and under direct fire, so that I was obliged to abandon it entirely and establish a new station in the open trench with the men." Yerges was placed in a shell hole, where he was practically safe from further danger of being hit, and where he was really safer than he would have been on a dangerous journey of several hundred yards through the heavy fire to the ambulance. When he was finally got to the dressing station his wound proved to be more serious than had appeared; he was rushed to the evacuation hospital near Verdun, where he died.

The Seventy-Ninth Division entered the line east of the Meuse at the end of October, relieving the Twenty-Ninth. Frederick Powell, B.A. '09, chaplain in this division, was wounded here on November 6.

The advance of these divisions east of the Meuse continued during the third phase of the campaign, and was going strong when the Armistice put an end to the fighting.

Artillery units from the Eighty-Third, a depot division used for replacement, played an important part in this fighting north of Verdun. These units, the 322nd and 323rd Field Artillery and the 324th Heavy Artillery, all contained Ohio State men. Captain Don McGill, '17, of the 308th Trench Mortar Battery, Eighty-Third Division, was awarded the Croix de Guerre and the D. S. C. for heroism in action, in bringing his battery close to the German lines in this action, near Brabant-sur-Meuse, October 23.

THE LAST STAGE, THE ADVANCE ON SEDAN— NOVEMBER 1 TO 11

The last phase of the campaign began on November 1. The object now was to drive the Germans entirely beyond the Meuse and capture Sedan. The defensive system having fallen into our hands, the day of open fighting was at hand. The struggle was not over, however; for the Germans, already facing the necessity of suing for peace, were determined to retain as good a military position as possible. They continued to resist bitterly the attacks of our troops, using machine gun nests with deadly effects, and drenching the woods and broken terrain through which our forces had to advance with poisonous gases.

The line, running from north of Grand Pré to Brioules on the Meuse, was held on November 1, from left to right, by the Seventy-Eighth, Seventy-Seventh (which had come back into the fighting after a period of rest), Eightieth, Second (which had been fighting earlier in the Champagne with the Fourth French Army), Eighty-Ninth, Ninetieth, and Fifth Divisions.

The Seventy-Eighth, Seventy-Seventh, and Eightieth, forming the left wing, pushed north from Grand Pré at a rapid pace. The French Fourth Army had in the meantime made good its advance on the west of the Argonne, and the French and American forces made contact at Chatillon-sur-Bar. The Seventy-Eighth was relieved on November 6 by the Forty-Second, sent back after its rest, and the Eightieth was relieved by the First Division. The Seventy-Seventh continued in line. On November 7 these divisions were on the Meuse in front of Sedan. First Lieutenant Adelbert Agler, B.Sc. in For. '12, with a machine gun battalion of the Seventy-Seventh, was killed on November 5. Joseph Regelsburger, Agr. '20, sergeant in a machine gun battalion of the First, was wounded near Sedan on November 9.

In the center the Second and the Eighty-Ninth Divisions advanced against the remaining positions of the German defensive lines at St. Georges and Landres-et-St. Georges, and on to Barricourt, which the Eighty-Ninth took on November 3. Second Lieutenant Howard A. Bair, Agr. '18, in the 314th Infantry, Eighty-Ninth, was killed at Barricourt, November 2. On the night of November 2 some elements of the Second Division made a rapid march straight through the enemy ground to near Beaumont, which was taken on November 5. Sergeant Raymond Baldwin, Agr. '20, of the 5th Marines, was killed at Landres-et-St. Georges, November 2. Captain Samuel Anderson, of the 5th Marines, who had been wounded at Soissons in July, was wounded again near Beaumont on November 5. Otto V. Overholser, Engr. '13, of the 5th Marines, was wounded on November 10, the day before the Armistice, and was in the hospital for eight months afterwards.

On the right wing the Ninetieth and Fifth Divisions had the task of driving the Germans across the Meuse. The Fifth remained in position along the Meuse, until the Ninetieth, swinging around on its left, should reach the river. On November 3 to 5, the Fifth was engaged in the difficult task of making the crossing; by the 5th it had got across and taken the two bridge-heads of Dun and Milly; then both divisions advanced northeast, driving the enemy back from the river. The enemy was now in full retreat, and the Fifth and Ninetieth made rapid progress until the Armistice called a halt. First Lieutenant Oliver Corwin, Arts-Law '15, 334th Machine Gun Battalion, Ninetieth Division, was badly gassed in this action, losing half his company and being cited for bravery. Captain William Yeager, Arts '19, 357th Infantry, won the D. S. C. for bravery in action on November 10.

EAST OF VERDUN TO THE MOSELLE

Closely linked with the Meuse-Argonne was the offensive east of Verdun. The line from Verdun to the Moselle at Pont-à-Mousson had been straightened out by the St. Mihiel offensive of September 12 to 16; after which it had been held as part of the American front. Toward the end of October an offensive was begun on the eastern end of this line extending beyond the Moselle and aimed at the capture of Metz and Mezières. The divisions in this region constituted the newly formed Second Army, under General Bullard.

One incident in this offensive appears in our records as the Bois de Bonseil offensive, in which the 134th Field Artillery of the Thirty-Seventh took part. The division, after its engagement in the first part of the Meuse-Argonne, had been sent to the Pannes sector, near St. Mihiel, for rest; the infantry regiments had then been sent north to Belgium for the Ypres-Lys offensive. The 134th Field Artillery remained in this sector and on October 20 took part in the assault on the German lines east of Verdun. Aldace Philips, Agr. '18, received two divisional citations for gallantry in this action.

The artillery of the Fifth Division was engaged in this action on the Moselle near Pagny, while the infantry regiments were fighting on the Meuse. First Lieutenant William Bancroft, Arts '18, of the 19th Field Artillery, who had been gassed at St. Mihiel and was to die after returning home from disabilities received in the war, was cited in the General Orders of the division:

"From about October 8 until November 11, he was observing officer for a battalion of artillery. His duties were manifold and very exacting, as well as dangerous. His observation post was beyond the infantry lines. On November 3, near Pagny, the infantry of the sector was subjected to a severe gas attack and withdrew one and a half kilometers. Lieutenant Bancroft refused to withdraw and for two days occupied his observation post with six men, with the infantry one and a half kilometers in the rear. Enemy patrols penetrated behind his position and were fired on by his party. He was at all times very alert and aggressive, and was responsible for all the artillery sweeping of the sector, which duties he carried out exceptionally well."

The Ninety-Second Division, some elements of which had been on the extreme left of the First Army in the Argonne, was placed in late October on the front east of the Moselle, and took part in the Second Army's advance toward Metz. Captain Robert Stephens, Pharm. '10, was wounded in action on October 30, Second Lieutenant Wayne Hopkins, B.A. '18, was wounded near Jezainville on November 6, and Second Lieutenant Henry Boger, B.Sc. in Agr. '16, was killed on November 11.

Such were the various engagements of the Meuse-Argonne, from September 26 to Armistice Day, November 11. In all, twenty-three American Divisions were engaged in some part of the campaign; these divisions, including over 600,000 men, constituted the great bulk of the American forces ready for front line service. Of our own men 334 cards mention specifically some action of the campaign, and this number is undoubtedly far below the total of Ohio State men engaged. Among the number are many in non-divisional elements, such as aviation, tank corps, evacuation hospitals, engineering units, and other branches. As indicated in the foregoing narrative, our records show 16 Ohio State men killed in action in the Meuse-Argonne, and 32 wounded or gassed.

CHAPTER IV

AMERICAN DIVISIONS ON OTHER FRONTS

By EDGAR HOLMES McNEAL

WITH BRITISH ARMIES—THE SOMME OFFENSIVE

American troops, including Ohio State men, were engaged in battles on other fronts than that held by the American Army.

The Thirty-Third Division was sent north for training with the British Army on July 1. It was incorporated in the Australian Corps as part of General Rawlinson's Fourth Army. Here it took part in the first offensive of the British in 1918, the capture of Le Hamel in front of Amiens on July 4. Corporal Randolph Hellwig, B.Sc. in For. '14, and Sergeant Lowell Orville Price, Arts '19, were with the division in this action. The Thirty-Third remained with the British Fourth Army until August 15, playing its part in the advance which led to the capture of Peronne; it was then withdrawn to be incorporated in the American First Army for the Meuse-Argonne campaign.

The Twenty-Seventh and Thirtieth Divisions were in training with the British Army in front of Ypres from early in July until the beginning of September. In this region it had a hand in the British counter-offensive of August 31 to September 2 by which Mt. Kemmel was taken. Colonel Stanley H. Ford, B.Ph. '98, of the Regular Army, who had been attached in February to the British 39th Division, was made chief of staff of the Twenty-Seventh and was present in the attack on Vierstaat Ridge, near Mt. Kemmel, on September 2. Second Lieutenant Karl W. Durnell, Engr. '17, was also present in this offensive. These divisions, constituting the Second

Army Corps under Major General Read, were sent south to join General Rawlinson's Fourth British Army, which was about to begin its attack on the strong part of the German line from St. Quentin to Cambrai. A preliminary advance was made by the American troops on September 27 to secure a better starting place, and then on September 29 the general assault began. The Twenty-Seventh had a terrible struggle breaking through the line to Le Catelet, but succeeded in doing so on September 29 and 30. Colonel Ford, as chief of staff, participated in the fighting from September 27 to October 18. Lieutenant Ralph Laughlin, Arts '17, of the 108th Machine Gun Battalion, was killed on September 29. A letter from his captain giving an account of his death indicates the character of the fighting. The division had been fighting all the morning of the 29th in the fog and smoke in front of the Hindenburg line. The men of Lieutenant Laughlin's platoon had become scattered in the confusion and he was rallying them together when he was struck by a German bullet and instantly killed. He was cited in Division Orders "for courage and inspiring example repeatedly shown until he was killed in action."

Another Ohio State man to fall in action in this campaign was Samuel Owings, Engr. '13, who enlisted in the Canadian service and was with the 102nd Machine Gun Battalion of the Canadian Volunteers. He was killed in the attack on Cambrai on September 28.

Two graduates of the College of Homeopathic Medicine, Dr. William H. Caine, '16, and Dr. Neil A. Dayton, '15, were serving in field ambulances with the British Army in this campaign and were given the British Military Cross for their services at Cambrai.

John J. DeVereaux, who has already been mentioned as captain in the Medical Corps attached to the British Army and as gassed at Soissons in July, was in the Somme offensive with the 46th Division, Lowland Scots. This division was issued life belts and swam the Canal du Nord on September 29, breaking through the Hindenburg line near St. Quentin. All the officers in the division were decorated with the Croix de Guerre for this exploit.

A noteworthy feature of this campaign was the presence of the 301st Heavy Tank Battalion, the only American heavy tank unit to get into action. This battalion was equipped with British heavy tanks, provided by the British Army on the condition that they should be employed with the British forces in France. The personnel of the battalion was trained in England. These tanks preceded the infantry in the advance of September 29. There were three Ohio State men in this battalion. Carl MacMillan, who had been in ambulance work with the French Army in 1917, and then at G.H.Q. as civilian translator, was sent to England in July for special training in the operation, maintenance, and tactics of heavy tanks at Wareham, and returned to France, with the rank of second lieutenant as tank commander, in time to take part in this action. Corporal Charles Layne, Engr. '19, and Private Alfred Lang, Engr. '19, were also in this battalion.

WITH THE FRENCH ARMY IN BELGIUM—THE YPRES-LYS CAMPAIGN, OCTOBER 30 TO NOVEMBER 11

While the First and Second American Armies were pushing the Germans out of Lorraine back on Metz and Sedan, and the French Armies in the Champagne were driving them back beyond the Aisne, and the British Fourth Army was breaking the Hindenburg line at Cambrai and St. Quentin, a vigorous attack was also being made on the northern end of the line. Here the Sixth French Army and the Second British Army were engaged in freeing Belgium from its invaders. In the middle of October General Foch asked for two American divisions to increase the pressure in this region, and General Pershing sent the Thirty-Seventh and Ninety-First Divisions north to join the French Army. They were accompanied by some of the artillery of the Twenty-Eighth. We had men in all of these units, mostly in the Thirty-Seventh; this campaign, known as the Ypres-Lys offensive, is mentioned in 71 of our records.

When the American divisions arrived on the front of the Sixth French Army on October 18, considerable progress had been made in the advance from Ypres. The line then extended along the Lys River, by which it had been retarded for a time. The next step was the advance to the Scheldt (Escaut) River, some 12 to 15 miles away.

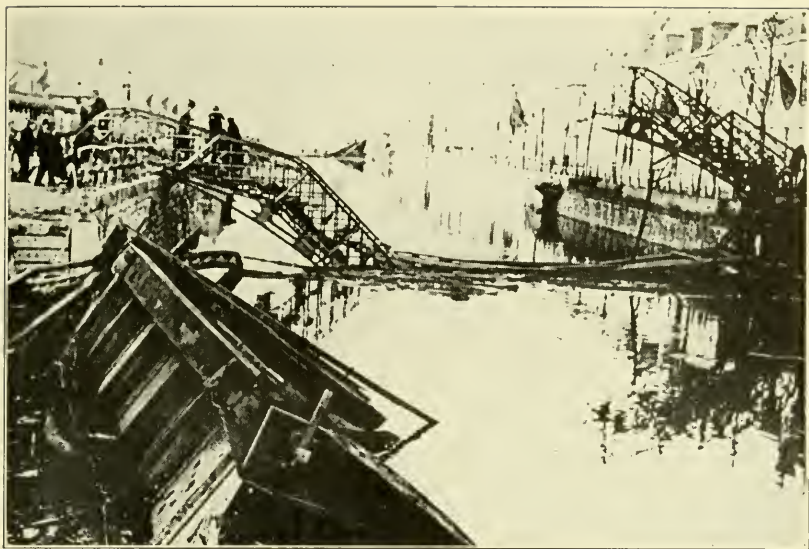

The hardest fighting was on the days of October 31 to November 3, when the American divisions got across the Scheldt near Heurne; after carrying this position, which led to the evacuation of Ghent by the Germans, the divisions rested a few days, and then renewed the attack on November 9, only to be stopped by the armistice. Many of our men had experiences in the first attack.

The story of Lieutenant Alfred Barlow, Law '23, of the 148th Infantry, Thirty-Seventh Division, as told by his captain, illustrates the character of the fighting in the crossing of the Scheldt.

"Lieutenant Barlow was in command of Co. L when he was wounded leading his men in one of the worst artillery barrages we ever saw. On the banks of the river hundreds of machine guns on the German side were working on us. The order came to cross the river, and Lieutenant Barlow and his company sprang from their hasty dug-ins and began to construct rafts and to fell trees. For hours they worked and one after another was picked off. Lieutenant Barlow was wounded in the leg by a piece of high explosive shell, but being the only officer left with his command he refused to go to the rear. The little band got across the river and dug in and held its position until reinforcements arrived. He was later wounded in both feet by shrapnel and was carried to the rear. No braver man ever led his men in battle."

Lieutenant Barlow lost his right leg below the knee. He was decorated with the American D. S. C. and the Belgian Croix de Guerre with Palms.

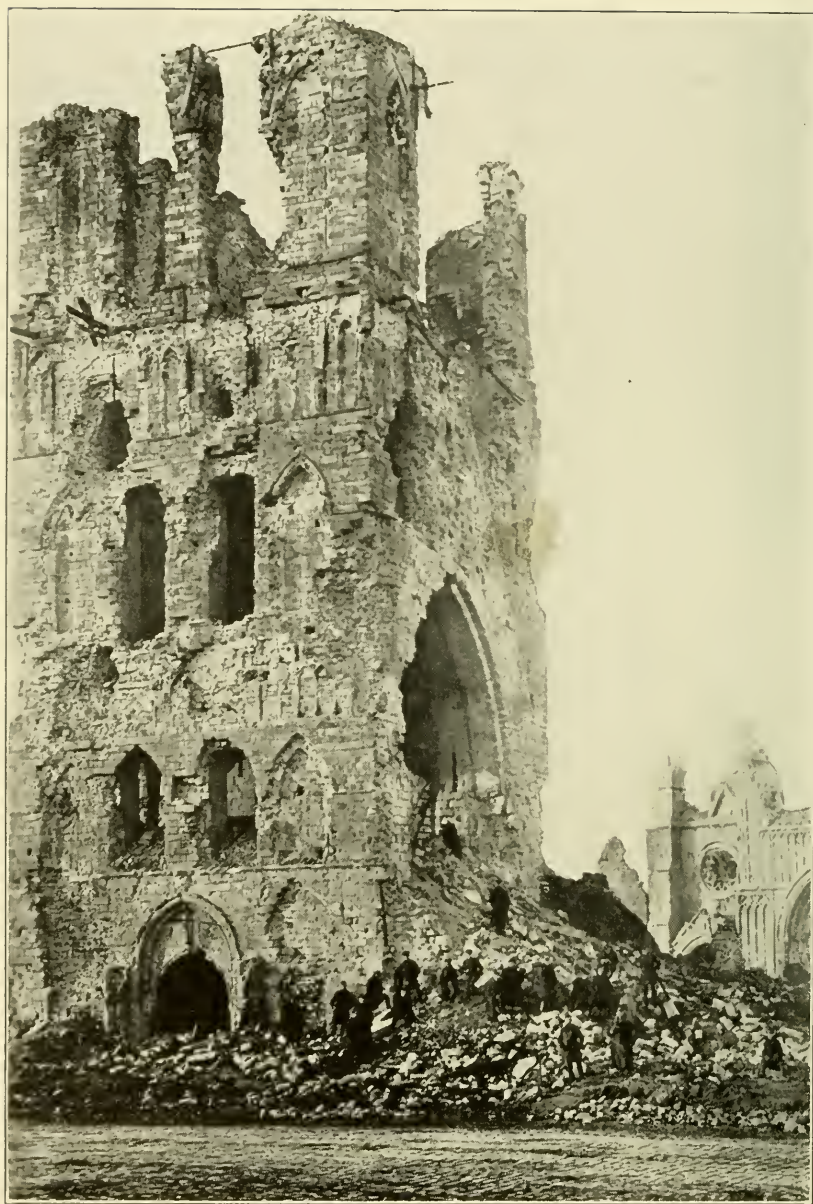

Albert Hoster, Arts '19, in the 136th Field Artillery, was gassed on October 28; Sergeant Herbert McDonald, Arts '18, was wounded by an aeroplane bomb on the same day. Sergeant Paul Gusler, Agr. '20, of the 145th Machine Gun Battalion, was killed on October 31. Jesse Lane, who had been cited in the Meuse-Argonne, was wounded here on October 31, a few hours before his regiment crossed the Scheldt. First Lieutenant Neil J. Foster, Engr. '16, in command of Co. E, 145th Infantry, was severely wounded October 31. Captain Robert Tavenner, B.A. '08, 148th Infantry, was wounded near Olsene on the Lys River, October 31; he was cited in Division Orders and received the D. S. C. and the D. S. M. Arthur Redrup, Engr. '22, of the Medical Detachment, 145th Infantry, was wounded on October 31. Private Robert Gray, Arts '15, in the Ambulance Service, 112th Sanitary Train, received a slight wound at Olsene on the same day. First Lieutenant Ralph Mork, B.Sc. in Agr. 1920, 148th Infantry, was wounded by shrapnel near Heurne in the crossing of the Scheldt. Sergeant Edward Williams, Engr. '17, of the 145th Infantry, was gassed in this region and was awarded the Belgian Croix de Guerre. Captain John W. Renner, M.D. '12, in the Medical Detachment, 147th Infantry, was leaving the field on the night of November 3, when he was struck by shrapnel and instantly killed. His services were recognized by the conferring of the Belgian Croix de Guerre.

Several other of our men received this Belgian decoration. Lieutenant Colonel Harry Snively, B.A. '95, in command of the 112th Sanitary Train, received the cross for working under shell fire in the Ypres-Lys. Captain Paul Meek, B.A. '05, of the 112th Field Signal Battalion, was decorated for gallantry in action; Captain Morse Osborne, Arts '09, Field Hospital 146, Second Lieutenant Herbert H. Beeson, Arts '15, in the Supply Co. of the 28th Division; Sergeant LeRoy Bradford, LL.B. '14; 112th Sanitary Train; Corporal Charles W. Cook, Engr. '19, 112th Sanitary Train, were all given the Croix de Guerre. E. Sterling Nichol, already noticed for his work in various fields, was with his ambulance in the French Army here and received the Belgian Croix de Guerre with Gold Star. Walter Sapp, Arts '19, in the Medical Detachment, 146th Infantry, received a divisional citation for his work in this action. He had his ambulance shot up, but under great difficulties was able to get it back with the wounded to the zone of safety.

WITH THE ITALIAN ARMY

An American regiment was sent to the Italian front in July 1918. This was the 332nd Regiment of the Eighty-Third Division. Twenty-eight of our men are recorded in this regiment in Italy.

A serious situation had been created on the Italian front in the fall of 1917. For three years the Italian Army had been slowly advancing with heroic effort over the most difficult terrain, in which the heights were all in the hands of the enemy. They had climbed and fought and blasted their way forward over the mountains until they were in a position to advance into Austrian territory toward Trieste. The line, however, was a long and complicated one with weak places in it. Suddenly in October 1917 the Austrians and Germans launched a powerful drive at Caporetto on the upper Isonzo, and broke through, threatening the line of retreat of the Italian forces. The whole line was forced to fall back, losing in a few days all that had been so laboriously gained in the preceding years. The Italians made good their withdrawals, but when the line was able to hold again it was far inside the Italian frontier. This line of the Piave River held in the winter of 1917 and spring of 1918, but behind it lay Venice, and the rich open lands of the Lombard plain, a prize for the enemy if they could win on the western front in France.

The concentration of German divisions on the front in France relieved the pressure on the Italian front, and when in June the Austrians made their long expected attack, they were thrown back. The American regiment, arriving in July, did not, of course, add materially to the strength of the Italian Army, but it was an enheartening evidence of the sympathy and support which America pledged to Italy. This regiment participated in the advance of October and November which drove the Austrians out of Italy and revenged Caporetto. Wallace C. Sabine, B.A. '86, professor of physics in Harvard University, flew over the Austrian front in an Italian bombing plane and photographed the enemy terrain, thus revealing some six or eight hangars and a few artillery placements hitherto undiscovered by the Italians.

Our records mention the sections on the lower Piave River and on the Tagliamento, the fight for the crossing of the Tagliamento to Ponte della Delizia, the crossing of the Piave, and the decisive battle of Vittorio Veneto, October 24 to November 4. The regiment went forward into Austrian territory and remained there as part of the Italian Army of Occupation until it was withdrawn in March 1919.

First Lieutenant Robert Copelan, C. and J. '20, received the Italian War Cross (Merito di Guerra) for distinguished conduct and courage displayed in moving ammunition to the front line under heavy bombardment on the Piave River. This decoration was also conferred upon Captain Garnett Brand, Arts '14, regimental supply officer; Captain Ray Brock, B.Sc. in For. '13, battalion adjutant, and Sergeant Albert G. Moff, Agr. '19, in the Machine Gun Company.

Aside from the men in this regiment, there were others of our men in the American Ambulance Service with the Italian Army. John Harbourt, B.A. '21, was in that service until August; he was later with the Thirty-Second Division at St. Mihiel and the Argonne. Clarence W. Bates, Arts '18, was in Italy from June 1918, on the Asiago Plateau, at Mte. Grappa, on the Piave, and in the battle of Vittorio Veneto; he received the Italian War Cross. David Bailey, Arts '18, was also decorated for his service in Italy. Douglas Pickens, B.Sc. in Agr. '15, sergeant in the Quartermaster Detachment of the Ambulance Service, received the War Cross for his distinguished conduct in the battle of Vittorio Veneto.

As noted this regiment was in the Italian Army of Occupation in Austria. The companies were placed at various points as occupying troops, at Fiume, at Cattaro Bay, and other places in Dalmatia. Two of our men were in Co. F, which was sent into Montenegro in January to put down local insurrections.

Captain Webb Vorys, J.D. '17, commanded the convoy of the first food train into Vienna; he also commanded the President's Guard on the occasion of the visit of President Wilson to Rome in January 1919. Max Chenoweth, B.A. '14, was in the regimental band which played at the dinner given in Rome by Ambassador Page in honor of President Wilson and the King of Italy, January 3.

CHAPTER V

OUR MEN IN AIR AND TANK SERVICE, AND IN GERMANY

By EDGAR HOLMES MCNEAL

OHIO STATE AIRMEN AT THE FRONT

Air service at the front, so largely a matter of individual skill and prowess, is best illustrated by the exploits of the individual flyers. We had five flyers killed abroad, three in air combats, one in a flight while undergoing training in France, one in the performance of duty after the Armistice.

The death of Thomas Barrett, first Ohio State man to be killed in foreign service, has already been told.

Murton C. Campbell, Engr. '18, first lieutenant in the 17th Aero Squadron, was a member of the first squadron graduated from our University School of Military Aeronautics. He had four enemy planes to his credit when he was reported missing. It was later ascertained that he had been killed in action, August 23. Lieutenant Campbell had won the British Distinguished Flying Cross in August. His letters home give a vivid picture of air fighting. He got his first enemy plane in a fight between the American squadron and a flight of Fokker planes, starting at 14,000 feet. He tells how he followed his man down, keeping on his tail and firing all the time, until within 1000 feet of the ground, when he saw the enemy plane crash to the earth. He was then ten miles within the German lines and separated from the squadron, but got back safely. He got his fourth plane some twenty miles back of the German front and had to fight his way back, with two German airmen pursuing him.

Fred Norton, B.Sc. in For. '17, enlisted in the Aviation Corps soon after graduation and went to France in January 1918, where he was assigned to the 27th Aero Squadron. He was mortally wounded in an air battle in the Second Marne in July and died in the hospital, July 23. His record card tells the story of his heroic death. "He was flight commander of the 27th Aero Squadron, and at one time led five planes against the best aerial squadron the Germans had. On the first round of firing his machine gun jammed and he was helpless for thirty-five minutes, but all the time he flew about protecting the other planes of his squadron. After getting over the German lines he was shot down. He managed to land over the American lines, but in a wood and after dark. He had been shot through the lungs and died later of pneumonia."

Vaughn R. McCormick, Arts-Agr. '19, second lieutenant, flight commander of the 22nd Aero Squadron, was killed in action, September 12. He received his ground school training at Ohio State and his flying training at Lee Side Camp, Canada, and was then sent to the aerial gunnery school at Ft. Worth, Texas. He was in active flying service at the front from July until his death in action. He was credited with two enemy planes and had been commended for his bravery and ability. His last letter home, written shortly before his death, reveals so well his fine spirit, in which buoyancy is touched with seriousness and sense of responsibility, that it deserves quoting at some length:

"I guess the folks have told you that I was made a Flight Commander in the 22nd Squadron. I have some twenty men and six officers more or less under my charge, so have to do some looking after them. As none of the boys have been on the front before I feel responsible for their safety. One doesn't care so much as long as he has only himself to look after; it's the other fellows that cause me to worry.

"My engine went bad the other day and I had to come home. Four of them went up to the lines and got separated in the clouds. I certainly had a sickening feeling when only three came back. The other boy shot down one Hun in flames and saw him crash. A little later ten more attacked him and he thinks he got two of these before he dove in a cloud. When he ran out of gasoline he crashed on a mountain side. We found him the next day in a hospital. It was five hours after we knew he would be out of gasoline before we heard from him, and we had given up hope of him being on this side of the lines. You can imagine our joy when we got the telephone message that he was slightly wounded in an American hospital. It was just like taking a 110-pound weight off my shoulders.

"One would almost think we were in school instead of war on a rainy day. We have our cots against the wall and our trunk beside them. Our clothes are hanging around as if we expected to stay all winter. We each have a little rug in front of our bed and curtains at the windows. Out in the hall we have a sink with running water and shelves for our toilet articles. Every morning the orderly brings us hot water from the kitchen to shave with, so you see it isn't such a hard war after all."

Linus Russell, Arts '18, was in the observation section of the Air Service. For two months after the Armistice he was aerial photographer of German railways and strategic points with the Army of Occupation. He was also special messenger from the front to Paris. On May 16, 1919, while engaged on this service he was killed in an aeroplane accident.

The character of the Air Service is also illustrated by the records of our aviators who had the good fortune to survive their dangers.

Walter A. Avery, who was a student at Ohio State in 1910-12, and finished at Harvard University, received his training at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and in France at the air school at Tours and the flying field of Issoudon. First attached to the 471st French Escadrille, he was later assigned to the 95th Aero Squadron. In his first air combat on July 26 in the Chateau-Thierry region, he brought down the famous German ace, Captain Mendkopf. He had three German planes to his credit and had received the Croix de Guerre for patrol work in the defence of Paris, and the Distinguished Service Cross. On October 2 he was in a squadron of twenty commanded by Captain Rickenbacher on an observation expedition, when they were attacked by thirty German planes. Lieutenant Avery's engine was disabled by bullets; badly injured in a forced landing, he was made prisoner, and remained in German prison camps until the Armistice.

Louis C. Simon, Agr. '15, received his training with the Royal Flying Corps at Toronto. He was lieutenant in the 141st Aero Squadron. This squadron was one of the units of the First Pursuit, the members of which were the first to go over the lines. He was credited with four enemy planes, the first brought down in the Toul sector, the second in the St. Mihiel drive, and the other two in the Meuse-Argonne campaign. He received the Distinguished Service Cross and the Croix de Guerre. After his return he was notified of an additional decoration, the bronze oak leaf, to be worn with the Distinguished Service Cross, for heroic conduct at Cierges (Meuse-Argonne), where with two other pilots Lieutenant Simon attacked nine Fokker planes which were protecting a German observation plane.

Richard C. Martin, Arts '17, received his training at the University of Toronto School of Military Aeronautics. He saw service on the Toul front in May and at Chateau-Thierry in July. In August he took part in a battle over the German lines, and was severely wounded and forced to land in German occupied territory, being at first reported as killed in action. He was in a German prison camp at Karlsruhe until the Armistice. A letter home, written after the Armistice from a hospital in France, narrates his experience of the ending of the war. "Last Thursday I heard that the able-bodied soldiers in Karlsruhe were to start the following day for Switzerland. I wasted no time in walking away from the hospital to the officers' quarters on the other side of the city. Here I met Wanamaker and Avery and also four other members of the old 27th, two of whom were brought down in the same scrap that did me. By pulling wires among the German officers I arranged for my exchange through Switzerland with the rest. It was rather a risky business for me, because of the exposure involved, but fortunately I have come through it all right and am suffering no ill consequences.

"Both my shoulder and hand were X-rayed this morning and I am classed "D," to be sent home as soon as possible. The shoulder is still an open wound, and although the hand is healed, the entire limb is totally useless. Perhaps I am fortunate after all, however, as I learned yesterday that of the formation I was in when shot down, only one machine got back. Four were killed, I alone was wounded and two others were shot down unwounded as prisoners of war in Germany."

Walter B. Wanamaker, Law '17, was another air man with an adventurous record. On July 2 he participated in the biggest American air battle up to that time. He was reported as missing and probably killed in action, but was later heard from in a German prison camp in Silesia, from which he was released by the Armistice.

In a letter home he describes the combat in which he was shot down: "We were on patrol about 17,000 feet above the German lines when suddenly eleven Hun planes swooped down on us from behind. I was at the rear of the formation which was led by Fred Norton. The leading Hun swept by me, evidently not seeing me, to attack those ahead. He had unknowingly put me in a position for an easy shot. No sooner had he been put out of action, than I became aware of my peril; for another Hun was on my tail." Seeing that he would be forced to land, Wanamaker determined to wreck his machine, and ended in a nose dive in which he received a broken leg and other injuries.

Joseph Haskins, former instructor in Chemistry, 1915-16, was first attached to a French escadrille and was then with the 96th Aero Squadron. He was pilot of a bombing plane, serving on French and American fronts at St. Quentin, St. Mihiel, and the Argonne. He took part in twenty-two daylight bombing expeditions, and received the Croix de Guerre for low bombing in a rainstorm.

Walter W. Randolph, Arts '20, got his preliminary training at the Ohio State School of Military Aeronautics; in France he was in the flying schools at Tours and at Issoudun. He was with the American Army at St. Mihiel and the Meuse-Argonne, and was instructor in the American Advanced Flying School. He was a member of the Aero Club of France, and held the French Brevet Militaire.

Harold David Young, Engr. '19, was another American flyer to win the Brevet Militaire and become a member of the Aero Club. He was the first Ohio State man to enter the Air Service, enlisting in February 1917. He was captain and commander of the 96th Aero Squadron, and was in active service in the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne campaigns.

THE TANK CORPS

The plans of the American Command included the development of a Tank Corps that would have played an important part in the offensive, had the war lasted longer. It became apparent, however, that American-made tanks would not arrive in any considerable numbers before 1919; in fact, the first to come did not reach France until after the Armistice. Accordingly the British agreed to equip a battalion of heavy tanks, and the French to equip two battalions of light tanks.

There were eight of our men in the Tank Corps, according to our records. Three of these, MacMillan, Lang, and Layne, were with the 301st Heavy Tank Battalion in the Somme offensive of October, as already told. Homer Stine, B.A. '17, was sergeant in the brigade of light tanks that participated with the First American Army in the Meuse-Argonne. The others were in battalions in training at Langres. The one heavy tank battalion and the two light tank battalions mentioned were the only American-manned tanks to get into action.

THE ARMY OF OCCUPATION

The Armistice signed by Germany and effective November 11 provided, it will be remembered, for the withdrawal of the German forces beyond the Rhine and the occupation of the territory up to the Rhine and around the bridge-heads at Cologne, Coblenz, and Mainz by the Allies. For this advance to the Rhine through Luxemburg and German territory and for the occupation of the section on the Rhine assigned to American forces (that around Coblentz), General Pershing organized the American Third Army, made up almost entirely of divisions which had seen action in the battles of the First and Second Armies. Just 200 Ohio State men are reported as being in the Army of Occupation.

The Third Army began its march to the Rhine on November 17, six days after the Armistice. Crossing the line of the Armistice on that day, they advanced into Luxemburg and entered the city of Luxemburg on November 21. December 1 they crossed the frontier into Germany and by December 10 were in occupation of Coblentz and the territory up to the Rhine; on the 13th began the occupation of the zone around Coblenz on the east bank of the Rhine.

Occupation of enemy territory involved a great deal of administrative work beyond that which falls upon an army organization under ordinary conditions. According to the terms of the Armistice, the local government in occupied territory was to continue its functions, but under the supervision and control of the military command of the occupying army.

A letter of James E. Pollard, B.A. '16, M.A. '17, second lieutenant with the 447th Infantry, Fourth Division, gives a glimpse of conditions in the Army of Occupation:

"The universal topic is, of course: 'When do we go home?' We have been in this little town for exactly three months now, and there are no prospects of a change.

"The men are billeted in the German homes. A canvass of the town was made soon after we arrived. With a population of nearly 2000 natives, we have close to 1500 troops in the town. We have had little or no trouble with the Germans. One of the first things we did after we arrived was to have them turn over to us all war material or weapons of any kind that might be used against us. At that I sometimes suspect that a house-to-house search might reveal a few more things. For instance, we found about two dozen '77' shells, some of them already fused, upon one of the hills day before yesterday, carefully covered with brush.

"Now and then we have some German hauled before an inferior provost court and fined for selling cognac to the soldiers, but that is about the limit of their mischief.

"We are working as we never worked in the camps in the States; at least, this division is. Intensive target work is the daily program for the next two or three months. An officer on duty with a line company doesn't have a minute to himself. The men have an hour of games or athletics in the afternoons and then are free to do as they please on the afternoons when they are not on the rifle range. Schools in reading and writing, arithmetic, civics, history, grammar, and the like are held five or six times a week. Those men who signed up for the work are compelled to attend the schools, which are supervised by the chaplain in each battalion. There are boxing shows and movies, and more rarely a vaudeville show or other entertainment, either by the men or by Y. M. C. A. representatives."

The references to the Army of Occupation are very brief, but the following instances suggest the variety of services in which Ohio State men were engaged:

One man was at the Third Army Headquarters at Coblenz as assistant to the executive officer for civil affairs; another served as town mayor of Andernach from April 1 to July 1; another handled enemy war material at Trier; another was attached to a superior provost court and acted as assistant to the officer in charge of civil affairs at Prum; he served also on the Inter-Allied Rhineland High Commission at Coblenz. One taught in the army school at Trier three nights a week, another conducted English classes in the battalion night school of Gladbach, and another taught agriculture in the 2nd Division army school at Rengsdorf. One man was a member of the dramatic troupe of the Third Army.

The Third Army was gradually withdrawn and sent home during the spring and summer of 1919, its place being taken by elements of the Regular Army. Our records give dates of withdrawal from April to July.

CHAPTER VI

SCHOOLS AFTER THE ARMISTICE

By EDGAR HOLMES MCNEAL

AMERICAN ARMY SCHOOLS

The other American troops remained in France several months after the Armistice, many of them until June or July. To make this time more profitable and less tedious, the government organized schools for the men. There were elementary and secondary schools at the posts, high schools and technical schools at the division headquarters, and a university (the American Expeditionary Forces University) providing training for the professions at Beaune. This educational work was undertaken by the army and was organized under the Training Section of the General Staff. The instruction in all grades was largely provided from the army itself. In the A. E. F. University at Beaune, several of our men were used as instructors. Among these were:

Ralph Bushey, B.Sc., in Agr. '17, instructor in Agriculture.
Russell Stoner, B.Sc. in Hort. '17, instructor in Science.
Levi O. Gratz, Grad. 1916-17, instructor in Botany.
Raymond Peck, B.Sc. in Hort. '17, instructor in Agriculture.
Joseph L. Hefferman, Arts '16, instructor in Journalism.
Edward T. Kirdendall, B.Sc. in Agr. '14, M.Sc. '16.
Lloyd Foster, B.Sc. in Hort.

IN FOREIGN UNIVERSITIES

Arrangements were also made by which members of the A. E. F. could pursue advanced and graduate work in the universities of the Allied countries. Many of our men took advantage of this opportunity. Our records are probably incomplete in this matter, but the fact is noted on some thirty cards.

Most of these naturally were enrolled in French universities. Several attended the Sorbonne, University of Paris, but almost as many seem to have attended the University of Toulouse. A few were at Montpellier, famous from the Middle Age for its course in Medicine, at Grenoble, Nancy, Dijon, Poitiers, Lyon, and Caen. One reports special study at the Pasteur Institute, Paris.

In London we had students at King's College, at the School of Economics and Political Science, and at the Royal Veterinary College. Several were at the University of Edinburgh, and one or two at Birmingham and Aberdeen.

The work pursued at foreign universities is illustrated by a few examples:

William Wabnitz, B.A. '16, spent four months at the University of Grenoble; while there he collaborated in the translation of a French work on economics, Créer, written by Edouard Herriot, French minister of Public Works and Provisionment during the war, and senator from Lyon. Wabnitz also served, along with another Ohio State student, Lowell Gladden, B.E.E. '17, on the staff of the American students' college paper, The Alpine American.

Dr. Richard O. Adams, '14, pursued graduate work in bone surgery at the University of Montpellier. Franklin W. Gunther, B.Cer.E. '20, studied Mechanics at King's College, London, for four months. Harper Muff, Arts '18, studied French and Spanish at the University of Lyon. Leroy Luke, B.C.E. studied French at the University of Toulouse. Oscar Gunning, D.V.M. '17, took graduate work in Veterinary Medicine at the Royal Veterinary College, London. Arthur Edinger, B.Sc. in Agr. '18, took a four months' course in Agriculture at the University of Aberdeen.

CHAPTER VII

TECHNICAL SERVICES OF OHIO STATE MEN OVERSEAS

By EDGAR HOLMES MCNEAL

In the preceding chapters our object has been to get an impression of the experiences of our men in battle, in the Army of Occupation, and in schools and universities after the Armistice. The purpose of the following pages is to arrive at an estimate of the contribution of the University as an institution of higher learning. For fifty years successive generations of the youth of Ohio in ever increasing numbers have been passing through the University, receiving at its hands the general and technical training that should fit them for intelligent and helpful participation in modern life. From these generations came the hundreds of its students who served in the Expeditionary Force in the technical branches. The University takes great pride in its part in the preparation of these men for the faithful and distinguished service they were able to render to the country in time of war.

The principal branches of the service in which technical training was required were: Engineering, Signal, Medical, Dental, Veterinary, Quarter Master, Ordnance, and Transportation Corps. Most of these were represented both at the front and in the service of the rear. In front line action with divisions and regiments were: the Engineering Regiments, Supply Companies, Ammunition Trains, Field Signal Battalions, Medical Detachments, Sanitary Trains, and Field Hospitals of the Medical Corps, and the Dental and Veterinary Detachments. The services of the rear were coordinated in this war by the creation of a separate organization known as the Service of Supply (S. O. S.), with its own General Headquarters at Tours, and its own commanding general and general staff.

THE MEDICAL CORPS

There were 258 Ohio State men in the Medical Corps, 146 of whom were at the front in the American Ambulance Service or in Regimental Medical Detachments, Field Hospitals, and Sanitary Trains. The others were mostly in American Base Hospitals; some, however, were in Base Hospitals of the British and French Armies.

The dangerous and heroic character of the ambulance and field work of the Medical Corps has been amply shown in the preceding story by the instances of men killed and wounded and gassed in this work. The Roll of Honor for this branch includes Carey R. Evans, ambulance driver, Dr. Guthrie Burrell, Samuel Covert, and Dr. John Renner. Many more were wounded or gassed. The experiences of Dr. Snively, of Magruder, Fullington, Nichol, Kenneth Norton, and others tell the story of this branch of service.

To do justice to the variety and the extent of technical service rendered by the medical men of Ohio State in base hospital work would require giving the complete roster. All that we can try to do in this section is to give an impression of this service by citing a few cases of men in responsible positions:

Captain Charlton D. Postle, M.D. '07, was chief of the Eye and Ear Department in Base Hospital No. 131.

Major John W. Means, D.D.S. '06, acted as oral surgeon and general surgeon in Base Hospital No. 22, and as chief of surgical service in Base Hospital No. 3.

Captain Pope L. Marshall, D.D.S. '04, acted as surgeon for Plastic and Oral Surgery and Fractures of the Jaw in Evacuation Hospital No. 11.

Lieutenant Colonel George C. Schaeffer, '93, M.D. '96, was first assigned to King George Hospital and Croydon Jaw Hospital in London as plastic and oral surgeon, and was then transferred to the American Red Cross Hospital (later the American Army Hospital No. 1) at Neuilly, where he was assistant to the senior consultant in Maxillofacial Surgery. After the Armistice he remained in France as senior consultant in Maxillofacial Surgery.

Dr. Horace J. Whiteacre, B.Sc. '91, lieutenant colonel, was chief of Surgical Science at the Beaune Base Hospital.

Major Walter C. Hill, Agr. '98, was chief radiographer for England.

Special mention should be made of two Ohio State women in the Medical Corps in France. Mary Alice Swope, B.Sc. in Home Ec. '14, was dietician with Base Hospital No. 25, at Allery, France. Margaret Knight, M.A. '15, went over as interpreter and was made dietician for Base Hospital No. 12 at Camiers. She was cited in the dispatches of Sir Douglas Haig for especially meritorious service and was awarded the decoration of the Military Order of the British Empire.

THE DENTAL CORPS

There were 37 of our men (mostly graduates of the College of Dentistry) in the Dental Corps. Twenty-three of these were in the field, attached to infantry and artillery regiments and division headquarters; the others were mostly in base and evacuation hospitals.

THE VETERINARY CORPS

Fifty graduates of the College of Veterinary Medicine are recorded in the overseas service; one of these, Dr. Oscar Gunning, '17, was in the Canadian Army, and another, Dr. Peter Wilson, '16, was in the English Army. About half of these served in the field with divisions, in remount squadrons, or attached to artillery regiments and ammunition trains. The others were mainly in veterinary hospitals or in inspection service.

David S. White, D.V.M. '90, former dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine, was entrusted with the task of reorganizing the Veterinary Corps of the A.E.F. and was made chief veterinarian of the American Army with the rank of colonel. His distinguished services were also recognized by the Allied governments; he was made officer of the French Legion of Honor, commander of the Order of the Bath, and commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George.

Captain George R. Powell, D.V.M. '11, was assistant to the chief veterinarian; he received the decoration of the French Legion of Honor.

Major (later Lieutenant Colonel) Reuben Hilty, D.V.M. '07, was also made Chevalier of the Legion of Honor.

The French government awarded only seven decorations of the Legion of Honor to the Veterinary Corps, three of which went to the above-mentioned Ohio State men.

Major William V. Lusk, D.V.M. '93, acted as general veterinary inspector of the A. E. F.

Major Willard Guard, D.V.M. '12, was assistant chief veterinary officer of the Advanced Section, S. O. S.

First Lieutenant Armin A. Leibold, D.V.M. '11, built and organized the only veterinary laboratory in the A. E. F., in connection with Veterinary Hospital No. 6.

Captain Joseph F. Derivan, D.V.M. '14, was division veterinarian for the Eighty-Eighth Division and instructor in Veterinary Medicine in the A. E. F.

ENGINEERING BRANCHES

Graduates and former students of the College of Engineering were to be found in considerable numbers not only in the Engineering Corps, but also in other branches where engineering training was of obvious advantage. Such branches were the Signal Corps, Aviation, Railway Transportation, and Motor Transport.

THE ENGINEERING CORPS

As was the case with most of the technical branches, the Engineering Corps included units attached directly to the fighting arm (engineering regiments of divisions and army corps), and units employed in the service of the rear. There were 151 of our men in this corps, 58 of them in front line service, the others in the service of the rear.

The work of engineering regiments at the front was of an active and dangerous character. It included repair and maintenance of roads in the battle area, construction of trenches, shelters, emplacements, and barbed wire entanglements, placing of mines, and similar work. Brief notices in our records enable us to see our engineers engaged in these lines.

One man, Stanley Mauck, in the 6th Engineers, was killed on March 30 in the German drive on Amiens, as already noted.

Ellsworth Shriver, M.E. '14, served as first lieutenant in the 27th Engineers, a mining unit, in the Second Marne, and was captain in command of Co. C in the Meuse-Argonne.

Corporal Boyd O. Bach, Engr. '18, was in the 23rd Engineers, a regiment composed of technical men for highway construction, enrolled by voluntary enlistment entirely; it worked at the front in the Second Marne, the St. Mihiel, and the Meuse-Argonne.

Ernest F. McAfee, Engr. '20, private in an engineering regiment of the Thirty-Seventh, reports his work as electrifying barbed wire entanglements and supplying electric current.

The 29th Engineers was a flash and sound ranging unit whose work involved the locating of enemy guns by calculations derived from the flash or sound observed from different points. This regiment worked in the Toul sector and in the St. Mihiel sector, in the latter during the period of the Meuse-Argonne, where its services in detecting the location of enemy artillery was of great value. In this regiment were: Constantine Demos, B.C.E. '17, Walter A. Draudt, B.C.E. '16, Harold M. Richards, Engr. '19, and Carl F. Oberhelmer, B.Sc. in Agr. '13.

The 30th Engineers was a gas regiment and became later the 1st Gas Regiment. It was in line early in March and April and was involved in the German offensives of that time. First Lieutenant Wilson H. Knox, C.E. '14, records participation in the Aisne defensive in March and April, in the Second Marne, the St. Mihiel, and the Meuse-Argonne. The work of this regiment was the preparation and carrying out of gas wave attacks by projectors. One battalion was in the north with the Canadians in March and loosed on the city of Lens, held by the Germans, the heaviest gas attack that had yet been undertaken.

The work of the Engineering Corps behind the front (in the S. O. S.) was of course of the very greatest importance for the success of the offensive. The principal divisions were: Construction and Forestry, Military Engineering and Supplies, Light Railways and Roads.

The Ohio State man with highest rank in the Engineering Corps was Major General William Langfitt, Engr. '80, of the Regular Army. General Langfitt organized the 13th Regiment of Engineers, and sailed for France in June 1917. He served first on the General Staff as chief of staff of all lines of railway communication. Later he was chief of utilities and chief engineering officer, in charge of light railways. He received the D. S. M., and was made commander of the Legion of Honor, commander of the Order of the Bath, and commander of the Belgian Order of the Crown.

Major Bruce M. Mohler, B.Sc. in Pharm. '09, was in charge of all engineer responsibility for water supply sanitation along the front of the First Army.

Other men in responsible positions in the Engineering Corps in service of the rear were: Captain Albert Galbreath, Engr. '05, in the 12th Regiment, Light Railways; Captain Walter Bradbeck, C.E. '06, in the 55th Regiment, Construction and Forestry; First Lieutenant Ellsworth Shriver, already noticed in the 27th Mining Engineers, who was later operating officer of the Aubreyville-Decoville Military Railway.

Earl Braddock McKinley, Engr. '02, acted as architect, assisting in plans for buildings for American troops and for field fortifications behind the lines. He was later assigned to go over the devastated areas in France to make drawings and assist in reconstruction. After the Armistice he went with General Kilbourne's party assigned to make drawings of forts throughout France, Italy, Turkey, the Dardanelles, and Malta.

THE SIGNAL CORPS

The work of the Signal Corps was of an engineering character. This corps included Field Signal Battalions at the front, whose work involved the organization of all methods of communication between tactical units, especially telephonic, telegraphic, and radio communication, and Signal Corps units in the rear, which installed, maintained, and operated every sort of electrical communication from the base ports up to the zone of battle.

Forty of our men are recorded as belonging to the Signal Corps; of these 24 were in Field Signal Battalions at the front. The foregoing story of campaigns has instanced cases of men in this service who were wounded and gassed and cited for action in the field; for their work took them to the very front lines during engagements.

The varied services which our men were able to render in this important branch back of the line, because of their special training, is evidenced by a few examples:

One older graduate, Major Louis Krumm, E.E. '98, was in the Radio Section of the Signal Corps, in charge of a staff of expert wireless telegraphy men, which was engaged in perfecting methods of wireless communication along the Allied fronts.

Captain Harry Murray, M.E. '10, was in the office of the chief signal officer of the A.E.F. until August, 1918, and was then made chief signal officer of Base Section No. 4.

First Lieutenant Harry L. Kneisley, M.E. in E.E. '11, was in charge of the construction, maintenance, and operation of the telephones and telegraphs in the Intermediate Section, maintaining a toll line of 60 miles to the front.

Sergeant Frank R. Thompson, B.Sc. in Agr. '16, with the 403rd Telephone Battalion, 83rd Division, constructed permanent telephone lines behind the advancing army in the field.

After the Armistice he built a line from Paris to Etain, where it was connected with the German lines to Coblenz.

Captain Frank L. Tyree, Engr. '17, served as corps radio officer for the Second American Corps, which was with the British Fourth Army in the Somme offensive. After the Armistice he was corps radio officer with the American Army of Occupation.

TRANSPORTATION

In the Railway Transportation and the Motor Transport Corps there were about twenty of our men. Among them the most important position was held by Major David P. Beach, C.E. '95, in the Railway Transportation Corps. He served at the headquarters of the director general of transportation at Tours as district engineer of construction on the staff of the chief engineer of construction.

AIR SERVICE OF THE REAR

Many of our men went into the Air Service, 110 cards giving this branch. Most of these were in Aero Squadrons at the front or in training for the front, but there were also a good many engaged in various necessary lines at the rear. Such men were in Air Production Centers, in the Ordnance Section, in the Armament Section, in repair and assembly work, and in testing and inspection.

QUARTERMASTER CORPS

Upon the Quartermaster Corps lay the immense task of securing and distributing the supplies needed by the Army. In the A. E. F. supplies were either received on requisition from the United States, or purchased abroad, and then distributed to the front. There were seven Base Sections in France and England, where supplies were received and forwarded or stored; an Intermediate Section; and an Advanced Section, including the railheads where Regulating Stations were established for systematizing distributions. Beyond these, the supplies passed into the hands of Quartermaster officers with the Army, Army Corps, and Divisions, who commanded the services of the Supply Companies.

There were 70 of our men in the Quartermaster Corps overseas, about half of whom were in the Supply Companies. Those in the Service of Supply were engaged in many lines of work; at Base Section Headquarters, at Regulating Stations, as disbursing officers, in fuel service, garden service, graves' registration service, etc.

Among men in responsible positions should be mentioned: Major Ernest Coulter, Arts '93, in the office of the chief quartermaster at G.H.Q.; Lieutenant Colonel William Frost, Engr. '96, duty officer and base quartermaster at St. Nazaire; and Captain William Dupre, B.A. '10, executive officer at the Regulating Stations of Le Bourget and St. Dizier, who was engaged here in the work of regulating the distribution of supplies to the First Army during the campaigns of the Second Marne, St. Mihiel, and Meuse-Argonne. He received a personal citation for distinguished services at St. Dizier.

ORDNANCE

There are 44 of our men recorded in the Ordnance, most of them in Ammunition Trains attached to Divisions at the front.

OTHER BRANCHES

There were Ohio State men in all of the smaller and more specialized branches of service.

In Chemical Warfare Service abroad, which was only the nucleus of what in another year would have been an important arm overseas, we had ten men, some at G.H.Q., some attached to divisions in Gas Defense.

There were about a dozen of our men employed in liaison, interpreter, and intelligence work, as liaison officers, as interpreters, translators, and intelligence men.

Eight records mention work in the Judge Advocate's Division.

Three were chaplains in divisions: Frederick Powell, B.A.

'09, with the Seventy-Ninth, who was wounded in the Argonne; Warren Powell, B.A. '07, M.A. '11, with the Twenty-Seventh, and Harley W. Smith, Arts '11, with the Ninetieth.

Twelve men mention service in the Military Police.

There were a few also in each of these special lines: Adjutant General's Office, The Stars and Stripes, Postal Express Service, and the Rents, Requisitions and Claims Department.

CHAPTER VIII

OHIO STATE MEN IN THE NAVY

By EDGAR HOLMES MCNEAL

A large number of our men entered the Navy and many of them were in active service on the seas, both in home and foreign waters.

A few of our men were in the Regular Navy before the war. Commander Glenn S. Burrell, C.E. '04, enlisted in 1907; Lieutenant Earl G. Rose, Engr. '11, commander of the Rambler, enlisted in 1910; Lieutenant Byron Ralston, Engr. '11, on the New York, Admiral Rodman's flagship, enlisted in 1910; Lieutenant Wentworth Osgood, Engr. '10, commander of the destroyer Reid, was at Annapolis from 1907 to 1912.

Most of our men in the Navy, however, chose that service when the call came for the war. The principal center of training in this region was the Great Lakes Training Station, near Chicago; from there the men went to receiving ships at Cleveland, Detroit, Waukegan, and other lake ports, or to Atlantic ports and bases such as New York, Philadelphia, Pelham Bay, Newport, Hampton Roads, and Norfolk.

Training stations for naval officers were at Annapolis Naval Academy, Newport News, Hampton Roads, Norfolk, New London, League Island Navy Yard, etc. Our men also attended officers' schools of various kinds: for Radio Officers at Newport News, at Harvard University, at Minneapolis (the Dunwoody Radio School); for Naval Aviation at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, at Pensacola Bay and Miami, Florida, and at various training stations; for Medical Officers at Harvard University; Officers' Material School for the Pay Corps at Princeton, Chicago, and New York; Steam Engineers' School at Stevens Institute, etc.

Some of our men were used as instructors in these schools; for example, Lindley Van Fossan, B.A. '15, was commander and instructor in Signals and Seamanship at Great Lakes Training Station; Vernon Headapohl, Engr. '20, was instructor in Machine Gunnery and Bombs at Great Lakes; and John J. Paine, B.A. '12, was in charge of the Naval Theory Radio School at Great Lakes.

Although the United States was already a great naval power, the exigencies of this war required an immense extension of its equipment and resources. One feature of this expansion was in connection with submarine warfare. The largest submarine base in the world was constructed at New London, Conn., under the direction of Commander Burrell, C.E. '04, of the Regular Navy. Ensign George H. Chamberlain, Engr. '15, was experimental engineer at this base, working on anti-submarine devices. Lieutenant Jonah W. Gwynne, M.E. in E.E. '04, was engaged during the whole period of the war in the work of building, equipping, and maintaining submarine bases.

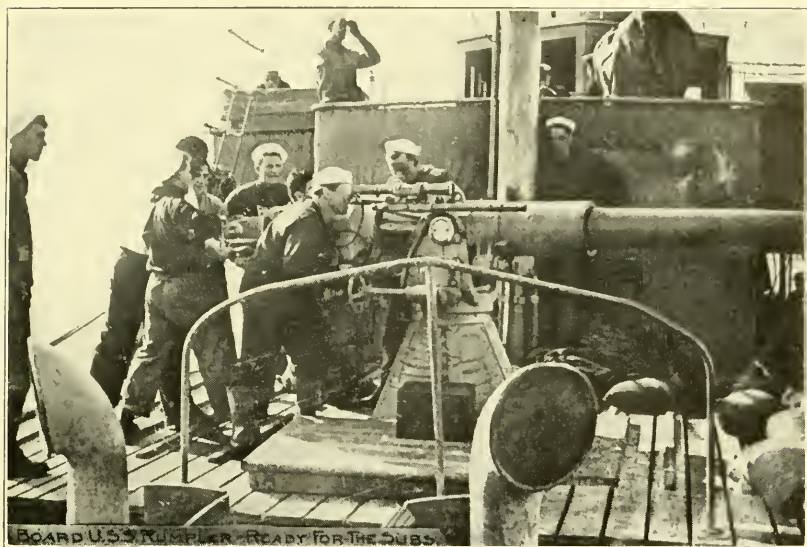

The departments at Washington and at other Navy Department centers were correspondingly enlarged, and university men with technical training were called into service. We had men in such divisions as the Bureau of Steam Engineering, Bureau of Yards and Docks, Bureau of Codes and Ciphers, Transport Service Office at Baltimore, and District Boards of Inventory and Appraisal.

Interesting and important as these developments were, the story of the Navy in action is obviously more dramatic. It is proper to notice first in this connection the cases of the men who lost their lives in the service. The Roll of Honor of the Navy includes these men:¹

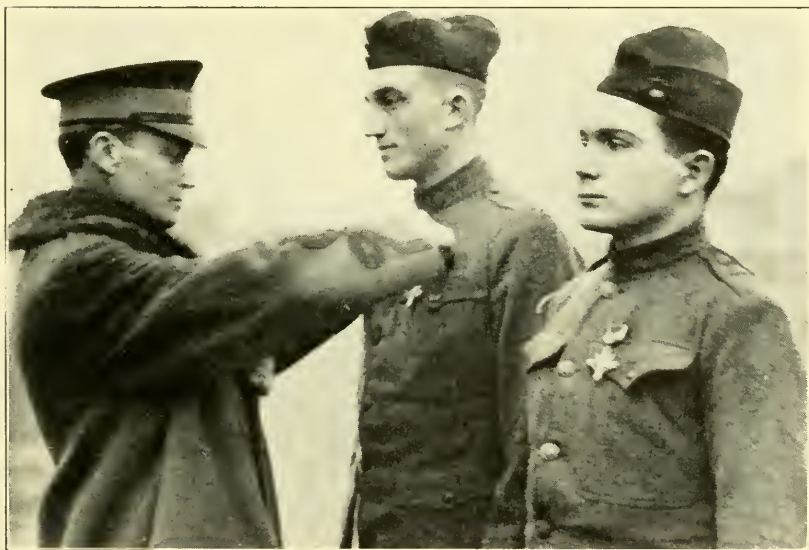

Thomas O. Jones, Arts '09, machinist, was killed in the fall of a hydroplane at Pensacola Bay in September 1918.

Ensign William E. Bingham, Grad. 1914-1916, instructor

¹ The names of those who died in the line of duty from pneumonia and other diseases will be found in The Roll of Honor in this volume.

in the Department of Philosophy, was on the Submarine Chaser Lancaster; he was drowned off the coast of Tangiers in the swamping of a small boat on December 6, 1918.

Lieutenant Hadley H. Teter, M.D. '16, assistant surgeon on the Tampa, was lost at sea when the Tampa was torpedoed in Bristol Channel on September 26, 1918.

The account of this disaster is given in Secretary of the Navy Daniels' Official Report: "The most serious loss of life due to enemy activity was the loss of the Coast Guard Cutter Tampa, with all on board, in Bristol Channel, England, on the night of September 26, 1918. The Tampa which was doing escort duty, had gone ahead of the convoy. Vessels following heard an explosion, but when they reached the vicinity there were only bits of floating wreckage to show where the ship had gone down. Not one of the 111 officers and men of her crew was rescued, and, though it is believed she was sunk by a torpedo from an enemy submarine, the exact manner in which the vessel met its fate may never be known."

Harold A. Husband, Arts '19, on Submarine Chaser 325, was washed overboard and drowned in the English Channel, on August 12, 1918.

The principal kinds of service at sea in which our men were engaged were: submarines, submarine chasers, and coast guard vessels, convoys, troop transports, battleships, and other war vessels. The technical branches in which our men were most largely represented were: Medical Service, Radio Service, and Naval Aviation. A few illustrations from their records will indicate the character of these various services:

Two men served on submarines: Henry W. Kelly, Civ. Engr. '23, gunner's mate on the O 1 for eight months, and Lieutenant Charles W. Hickernell, Arts '16, on the O 8, one of ten submarines with the Atlantic Fleet in the Caribbean Sea.

Submarine chasers were engaged in defense of our coast and adjacent waters, or in convoy duty, or in defense of foreign coasts and waters. We had several men in submarine chasers in American waters, operating from Nantucket, Hampton Roads, New London, the Bermudas, Panama Bay, Cuba, and other bases. We had several men also in anti-submarine warfare in foreign waters. The deaths of Ensign Bingham on the Lancaster in the harbor of Tangiers, and of Harold Husband in a submarine chaser in the English Channel have been noted. Other men were on submarine chasers out of English and French bases. A perilous duty was that recorded by Frank Long, B.Sc. in Agr. '20, who was on the four-masted schooner Whittemore, patrolling the Mediterranean and the vicinity of the Azores and Bermudas as a submarine decoy.

Of the two millions of American troops carried across the Atlantic, about half were transported in British ships, and about half in American ships. Not one American eastbound transport was torpedoed or damaged by enemy action, and only three were sunk on the return trip. We had men acting in various capacities on several transports, such as the Tjisondari, Mongolia, Scranton, Hancock, Suwanee, Mt. Vernon, and others. Clarence E. Murphy, Agr. '20, chief yeoman on the Scranton, records sixteen trips across from New York to Brest and Bordeaux. Wilbur Dyer, M.E. in E.E. '14, on the Hancock, claims for that ship the speed record in crossing the Atlantic in six days. Ensign Theodore Anthony, Arts '19, was on the Mt. Vernon returning from Brest with 200 wounded American soldiers when it was torpedoed in September with the loss of 37 of the crew killed and 10 wounded, and forced to put back to port.

The work of protecting American troopships from enemy submarines and destroyers in the danger zones on this side and in foreign waters was largely performed by American men-of-war, especially by the destroyers. American vigilance and marksmanship proved to be the most effective of anti-submarine devices. Many of our men were engaged in this convoy duty on destroyers and cruisers. Lieutenant Osgood, commander of the destroyer Reid, was on convoy duty between Gibraltar and Plymouth. Lieutenant Rose, commander of the Rambler, was on convoy duty in the Bay of Biscay; he was made Chevalier of the Legion of Honor for rescuing 41 survivors of the British ship Philomel, which had been sunk by the enemy off L'Orient, France. Don F. McGinnis, Arts '21, records sixteen trips to France on the Siboney as convoy. Ray Lowry, E.E. '17, machinist's mate on the destroyer Preble, on convoy duty out of New York, says that they fired on submarines on several occasions and claims to have sunk three. Lieutenant Don Hamilton, B.A. '17, on the Dochra, reports that they were twice engaged with submarines and claims to have sunk one. Other men report convoy duty in the English Channel, the Bay of Biscay, the Azores, and on the Irish and French coasts.

We had men also on the American battleships, which were stationed either on this side as the Atlantic Fleet, or in the North Sea as part of the British Grand Fleet. The battleships mentioned in our records are: the Pennsylvania, flagship of the Atlantic Fleet, the New York, flagship of the American Squadron of the British Grand Fleet, the Maine, New Mexico, Nevada, Texas, Georgia, and Oklahoma. The American Squadron of the British Grand Fleet was under command of Rear Admiral Rodman; in December 1917 it was sent to join the British fleet in the task of watching the German High Seas Fleet and give battle if it should leave its place of refuge. Lieutenant Ralston of the Regular Army had been on the New York, Admiral Rodman's flagship, since 1914.

Russell A. Speckman, Arts '19, quartermaster on the Black Hawk, was in the Mine Force in the North Sea. The Black Hawk was the repair ship with the "Yankee Mining Squadron," a fleet of ten mine-laying boats which worked with the British mine layers in establishing the North Sea mine barrage. This barrage stretched from near the coast of Norway to near the Orkneys, a distance of 230 miles, and contained 70,000 mines, 50,000 of which were made in the United States. It proved to be a very effective instrumentality in limiting German submarine activities. William A. Weber, Agr. '21, was coxswain on a mine-sweeper engaged in clearing up this barrage after the war, a work which gained for these boats the name of the "Suicide Squadron."

OUR MEDICAL MEN IN THE NAVY

Our medical men went into the Navy in considerable numbers. Some were on ships at sea, some in Naval Base Hospitals and Training Camp Hospitals. Dr. Arthur M. Hauer, '06, was director of the Eye, Ear, Nose, and Throat Division of the Naval Hospital at Hampton Roads. Dr. Jonathan Forman, B.A. '10, M.D. '13, assistant professor of Pathology, was assistant surgeon at the same hospital. Dr. Russell Bussdicker, '17, was assistant surgeon with the Navy and Marine Air Force at Paris. Dr. James A. Brown, '17, was on the Hannibal, a submarine chaser in the English Channel. Dr. Walter A. Anderson, '17, was on the transport Mt. Vernon. Others in the Navy were: Dr. Charles D. Padan, '17, on the Los Angeles; Dr. Dallas Pond, '17, on the Frederick; Dr. George E. Kalter, '16, on the Porter at Queenstown, later attached to Naval Aviation at Dunkirk and Pauillac, in the Naval Hospital at Brest, and on the Kaiserin Augusta Victoria; Dr. Philip J. Reel, D.V.M. '11, M.D. '15, at Hampton Roads; Dr. William Parent '18, at Great Lakes Training Station; Dr. Frank A. Williams, Engr. '12, M.D., University of Chicago '17, on the Tonopah at Cape May and on cruise to Constantinople; and Dr. Harold Timberlake '17, at Camp Grant and Ft. Benjamin Harrison.

OUR MEN IN NAVAL AVIATION

Several men in Naval Aviation saw service abroad, the interesting character of which is indicated by a few examples. Rodney Willets, C.J. '18, was chief aerial photographer in the Photographic Section of the Northern Bombing Group. Lieutenant Parr H. Dole, Engr. '02, was on Admiral Sims' staff; later he was loaned to the Balloon Section to undertake the construction of a hydrogen plant at Paris, which was to be the largest in the world, but which was not completed because of the Armistice. Gaylord Folk, Edu. '20, served in the Repair and Assembly Department of the Northern Bombing Group. Edwin C. Blair, '19, was associate editor of The Pauillac Pilot, the Navy Air Reserve newspaper.

CHAPTER IX

OLDER ALUMNI IN THE A. E. F.

By EDGAR HOLMES McNEAL

Like the great body of American soldiers abroad, the Ohio State men were mostly young men in the twenties. There was, however, a considerable number of older graduates and former students in active service in the Expeditionary Force, whose presence is explained either by long-standing interest in military affairs, or by special training acquired in professions for which there was a demand in a modern army.

The University has always been well represented in the Regular Army, and this accounts for the number of alumni, who held high rank in the Regular Army and served overseas.

Major General William Langfitt, Engr. '80, enlisted in the Regular Army in 1878 after two years in Engineering at Ohio State. He graduated from the Military Academy at West Point in 1883 as second lieutenant, being promoted to first lieutenant in 1884, captain in 1885, major in 1903, and colonel in 1913. He became brigadier general and major general in the National Army, reverting to his former grade after the war. His services in the Engineering Corps have been described.

Brigadier General Sigerfoos, B.Ph. '91, entered the Regular Army as second lieutenant in 1891. He saw service in Cuba in the Spanish war, and in the Philippines. For four years he was commandant at the University of Minnesota, where he took advantage of the opportunity to gain the degrees of LL.B. and LL.M. in 1908 and 1909. He was for a time in the War College at Washington, was with General Pershing on the Mexican border, and was sent to China. At the outbreak of the war he had the rank of colonel. From June to September 1918 he was director of the Army School of the Line at Langres; he was then relieved to assume command of the 56th Brigade, Eighty-Second Division, for the attack on Argonne Forest. His death in the field has been told.

Brigadier General Charles E. Kilbourne, Engr. '93, enlisted in the Regular Army in June 1898; he saw service in the Spanish War, in the Moro insurrection in the Philippines, and in the relief of Peking. In France he served with the British at Lens and the French at the Chemin-des-Dames, and in the American Army with the Eighty-Ninth Division. He was in command of the 3rd Brigade, Second Division, in the march to the Rhine and the occupation. He was wounded while on an inspection tour of the front with General Leonard Wood.

Colonel Patrick H. Mullay, Engr. '93, enlisted in the Regular Army in 1894. He saw service in the Spanish War, in the Philippines, and in the Boxer Rebellion in China. He was made lieutenant colonel in the National Army in August 1917, and colonel in February 1918. He was in France, attached to the General Staff, from April to October, and then returned to the United States to do instructional work.

Colonel Stanley H. Ford, B.Ph. '98, entered the Regular Army as second lieutenant in July 1898. He was made lieutenant colonel in the National Army in August 1917 and attached to the British 39th Division. In August 1918 he was made colonel and chief of staff of the Twenty-Seventh Division, which fought with the British Army at Mt. Kemmel and later in the Somme offensive, as already told.

Colonel George D. Freeman, M.E. in E.E. '98, entered the Regular Army in April 1899 as second lieutenant, having previously served in the Spanish War with the 4th Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He was made lieutenant colonel and later colonel in the National Army for the war. In France he was with the First Division in the Toul sector and with the Eightieth Division in Picardy as part of the British forces. He returned in command of the 159th Brigade of the Eightieth.

Major William V. Lusk, D.V.M. '93, enlisted in the Regular Army in 1894 as sergeant major and rose to the rank of major in the Veterinary Corps; he served in France as general veterinary inspector.

Others of our older alumni were prepared for distinguished service with the army abroad by their connection with the Ohio National Guard, or other military organizations.

Colonel Benson W. Hough, adjutant general of Ohio, who was in command of the 166th Infantry, had been in the Ohio National Guard since 1892, and was in command of the 4th Ohio on the Mexican border. He was with the Rainbow Division in all its campaign in this war.

Colonel Charles C. Weybrecht, '90, former adjutant general of Ohio, was on the Mexican border in 1916 with the 8th Ohio National Guard. He was commissioned colonel in the National Army in command of his old regiment, which became the 146th Infantry of the Thirty-Seventh Division. After the battle of Chateau-Thierry in the Second Marne he was put in charge of the salvaging of the wreckage of the battle. His successful carrying out of this task led to his being put in command of the troops arriving at the port of Nantes, where he had charge of the unloading and shipping of millions of tons of supplies, the construction of new dockage and warehouses, and the establishment of a base hospital. Colonel Weybrecht died at Alliance, Ohio, August 26, 1919.

Major Roy V. Myers, C.E. '93, of the 114th Field Artillery, Thirtieth Division, served in the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne campaigns until October, when he was sent to the Langres School of the Line.

Many of our older alumni were overseas with the A. E. F. because the technical training they had received at the University, or in the exercise of their professions, enabled them to render valuable service in the technical branches of the Army. As most of these have been mentioned in the course of the narrative, it is sufficient here to give the list, for the general impression of the contribution of older Ohio State men.

Colonel David S. White, D.V.M. '90, chief veterinarian of the A. E. F.

In the Medical Corps: Dr. Harry H. Snively, B.A. '95, lieutenant colonel; Dr. George C. Schaeffer, M.D. '96, lieutenant colonel; Dr. Horace J. Whitacre, M.D. '91, lieutenant colonel; Dr. Charles E. McClelland, M.D. '02, major; and Dr. Sylvester Goodman, G. Pharm. '96, major.

Major David P. Beach, E.E. '95, Railway Transportation; Major Louis R. Krumm, E.E. '98, Radio Section, Signal Corps; Lieutenant Colonel William Korst, Engr. '96, Quartermaster Corps; and Major John A. McGrew, C.E. '95, Engineering Corps.

In France two Ohio State men did a marked service in furnishing current information and entertainment to their fellows in the ranks by issuing a sprightly, weekly newspaper called The Stars and Stripes. This newspaper was an excellent morale builder and was sent to the trenches, where the dough-boys were eager to get it. The two men were Philip A. Von Blon, Law '13, of Cleveland, Ohio, who was the managing editor, and Archie Melvin Ryder, B.A. '15, of Steubenville, Ohio, who was the editor. The Stars and Stripes was first issued in France on February 8, 1918 and the front page of this number bears a likeness of General Pershing and his commendation of the paper. The last number issued abroad is dated June 13, 1919, after which it was issued for seven months or more in Washington, D. C.

CONCLUSION

The foregoing narrative tells its own story of the deeds and services of Ohio State men overseas. We had men in every one of the divisions that figured in engagements, except in the Thirty-Fifth. The numbers ranged from one or two or three in some divisions to 236 in the Thirty-Seventh Division. We had men in all ranks and branches of technical service, 258 in the Medical Corps, 151 in the Engineering Corps, 110 in Aviation, 69 in the Quartermaster Corps, 51 in the Veterinary Corps, 44 in Ordnance, and smaller numbers in the other branches.

There are exactly 1300 record cards in the official file that report service overseas, not counting the men in the Navy; and in spite of the earnest efforts to make the list complete, there must be a certain number among the great body of graduates and former students whose names were never received. Of the men recorded, 84 per cent were of the classes from 1913 on; that is, five out of six were of the age of 27 or younger; seventy per cent came from the classes after 1915; that is, more than two-thirds were twenty-five or younger; over one-third were of the classes of 1919 and after, young men from 18 to 20 in the midst of their college course. These general proportions hold, no doubt, for the two millions of Americans overseas.

The pride which the University may justly take in the record of its men in foreign service rests not only upon the results of the technical training it afforded them; we may believe that the fine spirit, the high purpose, the readiness to serve, which they shared with all the young Americans of the Army, were stimulated by the introduction to wider and higher views which university life offered. Neither from them nor from us would come any boast that they were better than their fellows in the American Army; we may only feel that they justified by their services the advantages that had been theirs.

In respect especially of one characteristic of the American soldier, the influence of the University is fairly predicable. Whatever the particular grievances driving the United States into war with Germany, the most striking general fact about our tremendous effort in Europe is its disinterestedness. This disinterestedness was embodied in the American soldier, in his belief, held clearly or vaguely, that he was fighting for high matters concerning the future of humanity. The general American consciousness that we were fighting against a power whose success would perpetuate an old and evil order in government and in world politics, that we were fighting in the cause of freedom and the cause of a better world order—that consciousness was peculiarly present to the soldier, sharpened by hardship and danger. In the formation of that consciousness, as far as it existed among its own men, the University must surely have had its part.

CHAPTER X

WAR SERVICES OF THE FACULTY AND ADMINISTRATION

Practically all of the faculty members of the College of Agriculture and its Extension Service were engaged in promoting increased food production and conservation during the war and will not be included in the following list. It is also true that substantially all members of the University Faculty and the Administration who were not in military or naval service took part in the drives to sell Liberty and Victory bonds during the war period. Another considerable group that limitations of space exclude from the list are about sixty Ohio State scientists who were engaged in our University Field Station, Chemical Warfare Service, of the Bureau of Mines, in solving problems connected with the manufacture of toxic gases and gas masks. Our list is confined to the roster of those members of the Faculty and Administration who were in military and naval service and a few others who rendered civilian service of an exceptional sort.

Awarded D.S.C. under G.O. 121, Dec. 5, 1918. (Extract):

"For extraordinary heroism in action north of Chateau Thierry, France, July 25, 1918. While on his first patrol over the enemy's lines he attacked an enemy two seater bi-plane. While thus occupied he was vigorously attacked by another enemy plane, but by a quick turn, skillful maneuvering, and accurate shooting, he drove the second plane to the American side of the lines, where it crashed into the woods. Lt. Avery's motor had been badly damaged by bullets, but he made a successful landing back of our lines, where he learned that the enemy pilot who had been made prisoner was a German ace credited with sixteen victories. Lt. Avery's conduct was especially commendable because his plane had been seriously damaged at the beginning of the combat." (The German ace referred to was Capt. Mendkopf).

On July 15, 1918 he was awarded the French Croix de Guerre under following citation:

"Avery, 1st Lt., pilot, 471st French Escadrille: A skillful and energetic pilot. He had many patrols over the front lines and in the course of one of them, in spite of the violent infantry and artillery fire of the enemy, he repeatedly riddled with machine-gun fire the German trenches facing a sector occupied by an American Division."

"For extraordinary heroism in action during the attack on Cote-de-Chatillon, France, Oct. 14-16, 1918. Lieutenant Banks led his platoon in repeated attacks on the strongly fortified enemy position. When his company commander was wounded Lieutenant Banks assumed command of the company and by personal observation, under fire of enemy snipers and machine gunners, obtained valuable information relative to the enemy's lines. He led his company across an open field in the final attack, under heavy enemy machine-gun and rifle fire and was among the first to reach the objective. After consolidating his position Lieutenant Banks, under a heavy hostile barrage, again formed his company to resist the counterattack and by his skill and bravery was mainly responsible for its repulse. Throughout the three days Lieutenant Banks demonstrated great leadership and utter disregard for his own personal safety, thereby setting a splendid example of courage and devotion to duty to the men of his command."

"For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty between the periods 9-10-18, and 22-10-18, firstly in the Wervicq-Comines Sector and later in the rapid advance to the River Scheldt. This Officer's services were particularly noticeable on 12-10-18, when he personally supervised the clearing of a large number of gassed cases from an area saturated with gas. During the operation on 14-10-18 he went forward of the 90th Brigade Regimental Aid Posts and patrolled a road approximately 800 yards in length, attending to the collection of the wounded. During the time he was subjected to the most harrassing shell and machine-gun fire; he continued working here until all the wounded, some 30 in number, were cleared. During the rapid advance 17-10-18—20-10-18 he was untiring in his efforts and was always in touch with the Battalions whose wounded it was his duty to clear. It was largely due to him that, though under the greatest difficulties, the wounded were so successfully cleared. His untiring energy and his contempt for danger gave a fine example to those working under him."

"For extraordinary heroism in action June 28-July 3, 1919, while serving as assistant chief of staff, G-2, American Expeditionary Forces, Siberia. On July 2, 1919, after the capture, by American troops, of Novitskaya, an American platoon detailed to clear hostile patrols from a commanding ridge was halted by enemy enfilading fire, seriously wounding the members of the patrol. Col. Eichelberger, without regard to his own safety and armed with a rifle, voluntarily covered the withdrawal of the platoon. On June 28, at the imminent danger of his own life, he entered the partisan lines and effected the release of one American officer and three enlisted men in exchange for a Russian prisoner. On July 3, an American column being fired upon when debouching from a mountain pass, Colonel Eichelberger voluntarily assisted in establishing the firing line, prevented confusion, and, by his total disregard for his own safety, raised the morale of the American forces to a high pitch."

D.S.M. awarded under G.O. 56, W.D., 1922. (Extract):

"As assistant chief of staff, G-2, with the American Expeditionary Forces in Siberia, he organized and directed the intelligence service of the American Expeditionary Forces in Siberia in a most able manner and under most trying circumstances. By his keen foresight, discriminating judgment, and brilliant professional attainments, exercised through his efficiently established organization, he was able to keep his commanding general well and fully informed at all times. His tireless energy and his keen insight into local conditions gave him a masterful grasp of the situation, which contributed materially to the success of the forces in Siberia. He rendered most conspicuous services of inestimable value to the Government in a position of great responsibility."

"In the action of his company on the Vesle River near St. Thibant, France, on August 4, 1918, he again took command of the company in the absence of the Company Commander who had been wounded, and carried it through a terrific bombardment of gas and high explosives, at all times inspiring all those under him to deeds of valor and effective action against the enemy. Mason, Infantry, has distinguished himself by exceptionally meritorious service to the Government in a duty of great responsibility in connection with military operations against an armed enemy of the United States. His unceasing devotion and untiring efforts have, without doubt, contributed in a large measure to the successful training of many officers, and the application of this training in the field has had its share in breaking down determined resistance of the enemy, also the saving of the lives of many thousands of our soldiers."

Also awarded Croix de Guerre with Silver Star under Order No. 14.675 "D," Mch. 21, 1919, G.H.Q., French Armies of the East. (Extract):

The following extract from a letter of appreciation sent to Capt. Mason by Brig. Gen. Nolan, A.C. of S., G-2, G.H.Q., A.E.F., is the basis of the award of the Meritorious Services Citation Certificate:

"Your work as Intelligence Officer of the 9th Infantry at Chateau-Thierry was such as to mark you as the most capable and efficient Regimental Intelligence Officer in the A.E.F. As such you were called to the Intelligence School as Instructor to train other Intelligence Officers to perform what you had found out for yourself should be done. This work, however, did not interfere with your being permitted to rejoin the 9th Infantry during the St. Mihiel offensive, where you again performed gallant military service.

"Since the Armistice you have been in charge of the letter censorship at Advanced General Headquarters, Treves, Germany, and of the Third Army. In conclusion, you have carried out, successfully, several important missions for your country in unoccupied Germany. No officer of your age and rank has come to my notice with a record for duty well done equal to yours, or who is so generally regarded with the affection and respect of his superiors, equals and subordinates."

Those who succeeded in crossing were thrown into such confusion that they were unable to follow the barrage; and, through the effective leadership of this officer no German remained in his sector south of the river at the end of the day's action. When 1 platoon had been cut off by an entire enemy battalion near the river, he sent other units to its relief and captured the entire German battalion, numbering 200 soldiers and 5 officers, including the battalion commander."

Cited in G.O., 90th Div., May 25, 1919, for having distinguished himself on Nov. 10, 1918, under heavy artillery and machine-gun fire, in handling a platoon of Company L, 357th Infantry, when that company reduced a strong machine-gun position of the enemy on the heights overlooking the town of Baalon, France. (Extract):

"So withering was this artillery and machine-gun fire that all means of liaison between the battalion and the companies, including L Company, were completely destroyed for about one hour, during which time Lt. Yeager, under the observation of the enemy infantry observers, gallantly led his platoon against strongly organized positions and assisted in the capture of 43 prisoners, including a major and a captain, and with his platoon of approximately 25 men entered Baalon and in conjunction with other units of L Company temporarily organized a defensive position in that town." The destruction of the battalion staff by high explosives prevented the sending of proper reinforcements, but Lt. Yeager and his platoon held their position for nearly 45 minutes until forced to retire to their original positions by the counter-attack of the vastly superior numbers. This service "was the means of reducing the number of dangerous enemy positions in the immediate front of the battalion, saving the lives of a large number of men who were exposed to machine-gun fire from three directions." This brought Capt. Yeager the D.S.C.

Also cited in W.D. Orders and awarded a Silver Star. (Extract):

He then made several circuits of the aerodrome, machine-gunning huts, billets, enemy airplanes on the ground and also the headquarters of the aerodrome Staff, which was situated in the Chateau. On his way home, 20 miles over enemy country, he machine-gunned, from ground level, several anti-aircraft batteries. In addition this officer destroyed two enemy airplanes on 7-8-18. These enemy airplanes were observed to crash by other pilots, and Lieutenant Campbell followed his second victim down to 100 feet although many miles to the side of the enemy's lines. Posthumously awarded Distinguished Service Cross under G.O. 123, W.D., 1919. (Extract):

"For extraordinary heroism in action in the Toul sector, France, on July 2, 1918. Lieutenant Norton, as a flight commander, led a patrol of eight machines, the first large American formation to encounter a large German patrol. His command gave battle to nine enemy battle planes driven by some of the leading aces of the German Army. Although both of his guns jammed at the beginning of the fight and were therefore useless, he stayed with the formation, skillfully maneuvering his machine to the best advantage. He was attacked by enemy planes at four different times, but skillfully avoided or dived at them. His continued presence was a great moral help to his comrades, who destroyed two of the enemy planes. On July 23, 1918, this officer died of wounds received in action July 20, 1918."

Received award of French Croix de Guerre with Palm under Order No. 12.027 "D," G.H.Q., French Armies of the East. (Extract):

"Lt. Fred W. Norton, 27th Aero Squadron, July 2, 1918, leading a patrol, met nine Pfalz (planes), and, although his gun jammed at the beginning of the fight, he continued to lead his patrol and put the enemy to flight. He was killed in aerial combat, July 20, 1918." He was cited for this award by Marshall Petain, Commander-in-Chief of the French Armies of the East, with the approval of Gen. Pershing.

On the night of July 20, 1918, returning with his squadron of eight planes from a flight over the German lines, twenty enemy planes were encountered. In the ensuing battle Lt. Norton was shot, but landed his plane safely within the American lines where he was found next morning, shot through the chest. He died two days later in a field hospital.

Also received posthumous award of the Honor and Merit Medal of the Aero Club of America.

Norton Field of the Army Reserve Airdrome at Columbus, O., is named in honor of Fred Norton. It was dedicated June 30, 1923, with addresses by prominent men from different parts of the country, the unveiling of a bronze tablet erected by the Columbus Aero Club, and Fred W.
